"I notice this morning a statement that there now are in New York 30,000 homeless and unemployed men," said John Long, who is in charge of the bread line at the Bowery mission, 50 Bowery, the most famous bread line in the world. "I think that a too modest statement. I think the number is 100,000 or over." Thirty thousand is the estimate given by Charities Commissioner Robert W. Hebbard, who admitted it was a conservative estimate. Mr. Hebbard, with the other men connected with the organization having to do with caring for homeless men in New York, has started a campaign to keep away from this city any more men out of work or without money. At a conference of those men in the United Charities Building Thursday afternoon one speaker made the statement that the condition of homeless and unemployed men in New York has not been so pressing since the soup-house year of 1893. "Every night now we have to turn away from 300 to 500 men," said Mr. Long. "We always have had bread for 1,000, but we never had to turn anybody away before. Many times during the worst months last winter we did not feed more than 600 to 800 men in a night. Now we always feed 1,000. It is hard to have to turn away several hundred hungry men who have waited in line a long time confident of getting something when their turn comes." The National Hotel, 108 Bowery, which has 144 10-cent beds, turns away applications every night. The Palma House, which accommodates 198 lodgers, is turning away more and more every night. The Squirrel Inn reading room on the Bowery, which ordinarily has 200 men in it, now has double that number."

I am opposed to this bill, first, because it calls for an appropriation of $250,000 to be used for buying a site on which to locate buildings that will cost possibly half a million dollars more to complete. Such gigantic preparations for the reception of immigrants do not smack of great restrictions. Yea, it means that all are invited irrespective of class, kind, or condition, without any limitations whatever. And, in the second place, I am opposed to this bill because the organized laboring classes, not only of my district, but of all the United States, are opposed to unrestricted immigration of paupers from Continental Europe or any other place, and I must say that I believe organized labor knows what is best for itself.

The mining interest in my district is now passing through a crisis. The merchants are doing no business, and the street cars running from my town of Farmington to the lead belt have almost stopped. And yet less than one year ago you could not get enough laborers to that section; the demand was greater than the supply. And now you have so many that you do not want them. They are flocking, as I said, to the cities, where they can at least obtain something upon which to exist. If we were a little more patient and a little more thoughtful and would do things with a little more discretion and deliberation, we would not want all of Europe to empty itself into this country to build all our railroads and to settle up all our prairies and open up all of our mines within the next ten years, which ought to take us fifty years or more to do in a sane and beneficial manner. I am pleading for business sanity and a higher wage for the laboring classes.

SANITY IN BUSINESS.

Let us not charge everything to the gamblers of Wall street and the weakness of our present financial system, which our Republican friends at one time in its history never tired of glorifying. Bad as Wall street is, and as bad as our financial system is, there is another side to our present condition of depression. The truth is that the gambling spirit has permeated the whole business world and values have been exaggerated beyond all reason. Enterprises have been built on wind and much borrowed capital, and men have been induced to leave their farms to become laborers to meet the demands of money-mad promoters and speculators with all sorts of schemes, and finally the day of liquidation came unexpectedly, as it always does. And now the man who toils is starving or begging for something to keep him from starving, his children are crying for bread and suffering from cold, and his condition is altogether miserable, for this one reason—that the plunging, lucre-seeking "prosperity" enthusiasts howled for more labor, secured it from every point of the compass, and again howled for more, when, if they had held their business on a sane and legitimate basis, they would not have needed so much labor and would not have brought about the conditions that now exist.

What this country does need, and I repeat it, is sanity in business and, together with that, a better financial system. It would be well to remember that God used six days—and God's six days, the scientists say, are not our days, but millions of years—to make this little world upon which man struts at times so awfully.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

I am for restricting foreign immigration as a general proposition. There are certain kinds of immigration which are not objectionable, such as came to this country to settle up our surplus lands half a century ago, and the man who comes now and is willing to earn his living by the sweat of his brow, and at the same time desires to become a citizen of this Government, because he prefers a republican form of government to a monarchy, would be acceptable, but the pauper, who comes at the behest of some special interest, which is seeking cheap and ignorant labor, I am against. I am for the man whom our public school system is educating and who is wide awake and has made up his mind to move along lines that shall make him the keeper and manager of his own brawn and muscle, who will compel the corporation which employs him by and by to divide some of the profits of the business with him and his family. The American laborer is the best in the world; he is the most intelligent, and though circumscribed all around by the minions of wealth and the stubborn hand of the courts, he will yet cut his way out and be the man that God wants all men to be, free and independent and the owner of his own labor—his own person. I am acquainted with cheap pauper labor and know the evils of it, and how it affects the labor of our country and hampers it.

The pauper labor of which I am speaking is not a vague dream of mine. I know what it is, because it is in the great lead mines and in the glass factories of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company, of my district. This pauper labor is thick in St. Francois and Jefferson Counties. The majority can not speak or understand a word of English and do not want to learn. They are only naturalized when their employers pay the bills and have them vote the Republican ticket.

These pauper immigrants are accustomed to being bossed and driven like cattle, and they are accustomed, too, to living on the cheapest sort of food and of receiving and being satisfied with low wages. When they come to America, no kind of work is too menial or base for them to do without complaint. And they are often favored by their employers because they are servile and make good slaves, but while they are pleasing the men or the companies who employ them, and who are looking only for profits, they lower the standard of wages and weaken the cause of labor. They make the battle for the divine rights of good, honest, and intelligent labor the more difficult. They force down the wage scale, they are usually nonunion men, and in times of labor difficulties join the ranks of the despised strike breaker. This is not true of all foreign labor, but it is true of the most of it. Such is the case in my district. The Slavs, the Italians, and many of the Hungarians, who migrate to this country, are a positive menace to the cause of labor, as the intelligent laboring man views the question. It has been said on the floor of this House that the laboring man does not know what he wants, and especially does he not know what he needs. Men through all the ages, when they desired to enslave others, have claimed that those whom they would enslave were in need of advisers and guardians to look after them. This has been the pretense of all promoters, that they were mere benefactors of these ignorant toilers, and not their oppressors.

OUR FIRST DUTY AT HOME.

Until we get an immigration law that surely bars out and keeps out the ignorant, pauper immigrant, which the present law does not do, I will raise my voice against and vote against all laws that in the least advance the present law, or that make it easier or any more attractive for the immigrants who may come to our shores. It is our duty to first look after our own people. I want the American laborer to get a higher wage than he has been getting, and I want him to have a fair division of the profits, so he can have his own home and sit under his own vine and fig tree without having to move every time his employer says move. I want him to be able to save something for panics and labor depressions, and not go over the country tramping and begging as an outcast while his employer lives in luxury out of his former employees' share of the profits. I want to help him and, to do this successfully, I am in favor of a protective tariff that goes to the spot—a restriction on immigration that will keep out the foreign pauper competitor. I want to tell you that we have got to figure a litle more on the American man and not so much on the American dollar.

But I do not want to be understood, as I have already hinted, as opposing the industrious immigrant who wants to buy our unoccupied lands and live among us and become an American citizen, and help to build up and foster our free institutions. That class of immigrants we all welcome, and I will say in passing, that there are many of that kind in my district, and a better class of citizens can not be found anywhere. But I am unqualifiedly opposed to foreign pauper labor, brought here at the behests of corporations yearning for larger profits.

Before this session is ended it is my intention to offer an amendment to the present immigration law, so as to make it a more effective law in the way of keeping foreign labor from our country.

The statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], that those who oppose this measure are inclined to be cruel and unmerciful to the immigrant who comes here, I think, is a strained interpretation of our position. Immigrants have been coming to Philadelphia for many years past. If they want to be received with open arms and want to receive the best treatment, let them inquire before they begin their journey as to where the best landing place is. I have not yet heard it said that they are not received with kindness and consideration in Philadelphia. The purpose, I believe, is to enlarge the quarters and so to encourage greater immigration, not merely for the West, nor for the South, but for the corporate interest of the country at large. I do not think there is anything tenable or very serious in the position of my friend, the gentleman from New York. He, indeed, knows the art of handling words; he is a master in that captivating accomplishment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, when I rose to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] what he meant by undesirable classes and he left out of his statement those races now coming into the country I expected to hear from him at least an answer; and the fact that he remained silent, and the further fact that he has been on his feet twice since and made speeches, indicates that there was something in his argument that he did not believe in himself, something fallacious, something untruthful, and something that was not fair. He shows clearly that he is willing enough to use arguments that he can not substantiate. I consider this is unfair. Now, allow me to call his attention to the fact that the great German Empire is to-day inviting this very kind of immigration that he calls undesirable.

Mr. LANGLEY. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he keep well within the rules. The imputation of untruthfulness to the gentleman from Iowa will be a distinct violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to violate any rules. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that within three years 100,000 Italians have crossed the Alps into Germany, that they are being invited there to-day, and that Germany to-day is the one industrial nation that we must fear and against whom we must compete, and that when the German Emperor with his wisdom and sagacity sees fit to invite these men whom the gentleman would keep out, there must be some real good substantial reason for such action. Moreover, Germany is more densely populated than is the United States, and if Germany can handle these immigrants to the satisfaction of her own citizens and cries out for more, then certainly our great undeveloped nation with her unknown wealth of resources can use them to advantage.

Let me further call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he comes from a comparatively new State; that I come from an old State; that I come from a State that, next to Rhode Island, is the most thickly congested in the Union. To-day Massachusetts has over 56 per cent of foreign born, including the children of immigrants, who came here within one generation, not going back to the grandfather, but simply the father. If Massachusetts without any natural resources, without any fields, or mines, or forests, and deprived of those things which you have so abundantly in the great West, can invite that character of population and can successfully assimilate it and show to the world such splendid results in industry, progress, sobriety, education, and culture, then it must be conceded that a powerful and strong argument is given to this House for greater immigration of the races that still knock at our door. Again let me call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that only in those parts of Massachusetts where immigration has been largest—in Suffolk, Middlesex, Worcester, Essex, and Bristol—has there been any advance, and only in such counties where there has not been immigration, such as Dukes and Nantucket, Hampshire and Franklin, has there been little or no progress. Massachusetts stands among the New England States as a peer, and although she has no natural resources, such as Maine or New Hampshire, and is smaller in area than Maine, yet she is in the lead among the New England States, for the single reason that she has invited immigration. This has made her a progressive State, while those other States where immigration has not been known are simply going forward in a small way, if not going backward. It was the brain, brawn, industry, patriotism, and perseverance of these sons and daughters of Europe that gave Massachusetts her position and permits her to retain it.

Let me say to gentlemen of this House, that when their States shall be filled up we shall be happy to have the Italian and other races come to us. Your State of Iowa was built up by immigrants from Massachusetts. The State of Kansas and the State of Missouri and the great States of the South may well follow, and if Iowa can show the great success that she has done, it is because immigration has reached her confines. Then she can go onward and upward and make its success just as pronounced in the future, if this immigration continues. She is far from reaching her limit of resources. Let me remind the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] that Boston is a big city. Boston wants immigrants and has encouraged immigration, and we do not care whether it comes from the fields or from the mines or from the cities of Europe. All we ask is law-abiding men and a chance to put them to work. And if a great State like Massachusetts can succeed in spite of the fact that it has no natural advantages like the States over the Mississippi and south of Mason and Dixon's line, certainly other States ought to be able by the same means to attain the same degree of success. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a people who believe that it is necessary to the safety of our Republic that greater restrictions be imposed upon the flood of immigration coming to us from foreign shores, and I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to defend their views upon this question. Perhaps, if I were situated as the gentleman from Wisconsin is, who says that he represents a district in which seven languages are spoken, I might be a little more conservative in what I am going to say [laughter], but in my section of country nearly everyone speaks straight English.

I have listened with the deepest interest to the speeches that have been made here to-day on both sides of this question, and especially to the eloquent arguments advanced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]; and, although these two distinguished statesmen represent, respectively, the extreme views of each side of the question, I agree with much that both of them have said.

In the early days of this Republic it threw open wide its doors and invited the oppressed of all the countries of the world to enter and enjoy the blessings of freedom. It called upon all whose brain and brawn might aid in the upbuilding of the nation to gather on our shores and cast their fortunes with ours. It provided a brief period of probation for those who might come before they could enter into the full possession of all the rights and privileges of citizenship through the process of naturalization. No prophet's vision pierced the future and foresaw that in the course of the years there would stream through the maritime gateways of the land millions upon millions of undesired and undesirable citizens. Could this result have been foreseen, let it not be doubted that the founders of our Government and the statesmen of that early period of the nation's history would have guarded against the evil with which we now have to contend.

The steamship had not made its advent in those days, and the longer, more troublesome, and very expensive voyage served as a check. Even when steamboat and railroad became the leading factors in the problem of transportation, the bulk of immigration came from countries close to the sea, and the cost of travel kept thousands upon thousands in their native towns and villages. From the multiplication of railways and steamship lines and, in the case of the latter, the resulting competition and consequent reduction in transportation charges, can be dated the beginning of that increase of immigration which to-day has assumed abnormal proportions and which is daily growing more and more menacing. It is high time, Mr. Chairman, that we should call a halt for the sake of civilization; for the sake of the preservation of American citizenship; for the sake of all who earn their bread by the sweat of the brow; for the sake of our workingmen, that they be not brought into direct and immediate contact with the pauper labor of other countries, who are accustomed to living in hovels and subsisting on a crust of bread. [Applause.]

Nothing could be further from my purpose than to close the doors against all immigration. We should not do that if we could; we could not do it if we were so inclined. I am just as much in favor as anyone of giving a hearty greeting to those immigrants, whose habits of living and—may I not say—whose habits of thinking, are more nearly akin to those of our people. Welcome, thrice welcome, to all who come with sturdy hands and sturdy hearts, aspiring to American citizenship as a highly prized boon; who look upon the great Republic of the Western Hemisphere as the land of promise: the land where everyone is unhampered in the pursuit of happiness; where all may work out their individual destinies in obedience to, and under the protecting ægis of, the law. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I am firmly opposed to indiscriminate immigration. What we want is quality rather than quantity. Character, and I use the word in its very broadest sense, should be the primary test. I do not wish to be understood as advocating an educational test in the ordinary sense of that term. I would rather see admitted an illiterate patriot than an educated anarchist.

The sifting process should be more thorough than it is at present. A nation is nothing more than an aggregate of families, and as we would exclude from the family hearth every objectionable element, so should we put up the bars against every element that might poison the healthy lifeblood of our body politic, or become a menace, physically, mentally, or morally.

The influx of European immigration went on unchecked for nearly a century from the foundation of the Government. For more than three-fourths of that period we drew to our shores elements of population that have done noble work in the exploitation of our natural resources and the upbuilding of our industries. The bulk of that immigration was drawn from the north of Europe; from nations in which there was the strain of the blood that flows in Anglo-Saxon veins, and whose assimilation with our native population went on smoothly and almost imperceptibly. The English, Scotch, Germans, Scandinavians, and Dutch had no trouble in fitting themselves into the new social and political conditions that awaited them, and the Celtic element—the Irish—with its marvelous natural adaptability, was jubilantly American even before the sons of Erin put foot on our shores. From all of these nationalities there have sprung scions whose names stand high on the nation's honor roll; they have left the imprint of their useful activity on the development of every State in the Union. [Applause.]

After our great civil war, however, there came a change. It may be that the wars which came in quick succession from 1864 to 1871 gave the impetus—first the war of Prussia and Austria with Denmark; then Prussia against Austria; then Germany against France. It may be that there were other impelling causes; certain it is that the year 1865 saw a sudden upward movement in the number of immigrants to the United States. In that year came 332,000, which was 150,000 more than had landed in 1864. In 1873 the figures had increased to 459,000. And be it also remembered, Mr. Chairman, that this almost spectacular increase was due in no small part to the official action of English and German authorities who scoured the jails and almshouses and hospitals and dumped the refuse of population on American soil. Then Congress called a halt. In 1875 it enacted an exclusion law, by virtue of which at least some undesirable elements were eliminated. But this check operated only for a short three years. From 177,826 arriving in 1879 the figures jumped to 669,431 in 1880. They fluctuated widely until 1903, when the total reached 857,046. Since then there has been a momentous increase, for in 1904 the immigrants numbered 812,870; in 1905, 1,026,499; in 1906, 1,100,735; in 1907, 1,285,349. The significance of these figures is to be found in an analysis which discloses the countries from which in these later years emigration flowed westward. Of the total, in 1902, of 648,743 immigrants, Austria-Hungary furnished 171,989 or 26.5 per cent; Italy 178,375 or 27.5 per cent; Russia 107,347 or 16.6 per cent. For the years following the figures are:

| | Total. | Austria-Hungary. | Per cent. | Italy. | Per cent. | Russia. | Per cent. |
| 1903 | 857,046 | 206,011 | 24 | 230,622 | 27 | 136,093 | 15.88 |
| 1904 | 812,870 | 177,156 | 21.8 | 193,296 | 23.78 | 145,141 | 17.85 |
| 1905 | 1,026,499 | 275,693 | 26.85 | 221,479 | 21.57 | 181,897 | 18 |
| 1907 | 1,285,349 | 338,452 | 26.33 | 285,731 | 22.20 | 258,943 | 20.15 |

This leaves but 31.32 per cent for all the other nations of Europe, and from this is still to be deducted whatever is to be credited to the Slav immigration that comes from the Danube principalities and must largely be counted as about equal to the lower grade of Hungarian immigrants. From Scandinavia and Germany, whence we have always drawn a large proportion of our most desirable immigrants, there has been a material decrease in numbers since 1903, though Great Britain has increased her quota beginning with that year.

Figures talk, Mr. Chairman, and none more loudly and eloquently than those I have just given. They tell us that we are getting by far the larger part of our immigrants in the last five years, if not for some time before that, from the least desirable populations of Europe, and they will come in ever increasing numbers unless we devise some means to keep them out. Kept out they ought to be, for they belong to that class to whom I have already referred—the class that never assimilates, that never imbibes the true American spirit, that never furnishes good American citizens. Indeed, sir, within the last few months we have witnessed a spectacle which proves that to thousands of these people this country means nothing more than a temporary stamping ground, where, by working at wages far below those for which our American workingman can be had, and living as no self-respecting American can or will live, they can accumulate a few hundred dollars and return to their native heaths, there to live in idleness and comparative luxury until their store is exhausted, when they repeat the experiment. In the months of November and December of last year hundreds of thousands of Italians and Hungarians left these shores—let us hope never to return. So great was the rush that the steamship companies had trouble to furnish transportation. And these hundreds of thousands took away with them millions of dollars that otherwise would have gone into the pockets of American workingmen. [Applause.]

I shall further on endeavor to show the harmful effect of this unrestricted, or insufficiently restricted, immigration upon the individual and collective interests of our laboring population, not only upon skilled, but also upon unskilled labor. But before proceeding to do so, I shall first quote some significant passages from the last report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration. He says in one place that the question "must arise in the mind of any person examining the figures as to whether or not our ability as a race to absorb foreign elements is not on the verge at least of being overtaxed" (p. 5). In another place (p. 60) the report says:

What will be the effect if the present phenomenal immigration continues is a question that is constantly being asked. With regard more particularly to quantity, the question may be answered by the following illustration: China proper is the thickly populated portion of the Chinese Empire and is the country popularly thought of as representing the limit of density of population. With a net increase to our population by immigration of 1,000,000 per annum, which is less than the present rate, and the present rate of natural increase (14.66 per cent per decade), the United States would reach the density of China proper in about four generations, or, more particularly, in one hundred and thirty-four years, at which time we would have a population of 950,000,000. This is in no sense an estimate of future population; it is simply an illustration of the present pace.

In another place the report says:

Another year's experience but emphasizes and confirms the conviction that a considerable part of the large immigration of the past few years is forced or artificial. Two separate and distinct factors are from interested motives responsible for such of the immigration as is not natural; first, the violators and evaders of the contract-labor feature of the law; and second, the steamship runners and agents. * * * An influence which perhaps has not heretofore been accorded the recognition to which its importance entitles it is the "letter to the home folks," written by the alien temporarily or permanently domiciled here. These letters constitute the most extensive method of advertising that can be imagined; almost innumerable "endless chains" are thus daily being forged link by link. A letter is written to his brother, father, or other relative by an alien, who, after a few months' employment here, has been able to save $150 or $200—a small fortune in the eyes of the Italian or the Hungarian peasant—picturing in homely but glowing terms the opportunities of this country for money making. That letter is read by or to every inhabitant of the village, or perhaps even passed on to every neighboring hamlet. Others are thus induced to migrate, selling their belongings, mortgaging their property, almost enslaving themselves to procure the amount of the passage. They come, find employment at what seems to them fabulous wages, write letters home; and so the process goes on and on, until some of the rural districts of such countries as Italy and Hungary are almost depopulated.

Now Greece and Turkey are becoming involved in the same influences, and even the fastnesses of the mountainous districts of Bulgaria, Servia, and Montenegro are beginning to respond; all of which is exemplified by figures showing increases in immigration from those countries during the past year—Italy sending 12,611; Austria-Hungary, 73,314; Greece, 17,091; Turkey (European and Asiatic), 12,956, and Bulgaria, Servia, and Montenegro (combined), 6,693 more than in 1906. This is an influence which it is difficult, if not impossible, to reckon. That it is a telling, if not the most important, factor in the production of immigration there can be no doubt. The worst of it is that there are evidences that this endless-chain-letter scheme is seized upon by the promoters and money lenders to further their interests, and no opportunity lost to encourage both the writing and the extensive dissemination of such missives. When this is done the line is passed between natural and forced immigration, and the machinations of the promoter and usurer become a menace to the alien directly and to the welfare of this country incidentally.

Our Government has recently taken some further steps to check the immigration of undesirable classes. The act of February 20, 1907, has drawn more closely the lines in regard to contract labor. In his annual report the Secretary of Commerce and Labor says on this point:

Both the act of March 3, 1903, and the new act contain an exception to the alien-contract-labor provisions permitting States and Territories to advertise "the inducements they offer for immigration." By the act of March 3, 1903, there was included in the enumeration of excluded aliens "any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes;" but by the new act there has been added to the requirements concerning aliens whose passage is paid by others the burden of also showing affirmatively and satisfactorily "that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly." Neither in the new act nor in any of the preceding acts is there any prohibition of, or authority for, the payment of an alien's passage by a State or by an individual, nor has the attempt been made to definitely limit the extent to which a State may proceed in advertising the inducements such State offers for immigration.

In the practical administration of the law, therefore, many questions must arise to which the statutes furnish no direct, adequate answer. Some such questions are the following:

"Is it permissible for an individual to pay the passage of an alien? May a State pay the passage? If so, may the payment be made from funds contributed, directly or indirectly, to the State by corporations, societies, associations, or individuals, or must such payment be made out of State funds collected through ordinary channels? May the advertisements of the State, 'printed and published in any foreign country,' hold forth to prospective immigrants assurances of employment? May the State, as a factor of its advertising, send representatives into foreign countries to solicit immigration personally and by oral representations, or must the advertising in which the State is permitted to engage be limited to advertisements 'printed and published' in the ordinary sense—i. e., by publications in newspapers, magazines, etc.? What meaning should be attached to the expression 'induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment?' In other words, what constitutes a solicitation of immigration?"

These questions indicate a few of the complicated combinations of circumstances that arise to which obviously it is extremely difficult to apply obscure provisions of law that must be interpreted by deductive methods of reasoning. * * *

To leave to administrative construction the application of the law to a subject of such great importance, so complicated in details, and affecting such varied and extensive interests as this one, is but inviting discontent and criticism, and the necessity for mandatory legislation which will clarify the statutes is obvious. The law should state clearly, in terms incapable of misconception, and not leave to the uncertainties of deductive reasoning, the exact intent of the legislature, not only as to the exception in favor of States advertising their inducements, but also concerning the extent to which a State may proceed and the methods which it may adopt to make its advertisements productive of an increase in population by securing alien settlers.

We have not done enough as yet in the way of restricting immigration. Other measures must be devised to check this influx of undesirable people. Something more will have to be done to keep the pauper labor of other countries from invading this country. The Government has in its possession irrefutable proof that the invasion of the country by the hordes of unskilled and illiterate denizens of southern Europe is encouraged by their respective governments, and in almost every instance the object of such classes is to accumulate all they can and return to their native land, but under no circumstances to acquire American citizenship.

Let me present two extracts from the reports of Inspector Marcus Braun, of the Department of Commerce and Labor. It will be remembered that these reports created a tremendous stir; so much so, in fact, that the Austrian Government attempted to forbid Mr. Braun to sojourn within its realm. If any man doubt the necessity for drastic legislation on this subject, let him read those reports. In one of these, which was made just two years ago, Mr. Braun said:

To sum up the situation appertaining to the question of Hungarian immigration to the United States, I desire to direct attention to the fact that there is a small proportion of the Hungarian people called the "Agrarians," who make sincere effort to restrict emigration, who, however, are in a very deplorable minority. The majority do advocate emigration and exert themselves in every particular and any way and manner possible to promote, induce, and assist emigration. The objects and reasons for this constant agitation are obvious and manifold, but they are all concentrated in one particular proposition, and that is the obtaining and earning all the money they possibly can in the United States, and then either to send or bring it back to Hungary, buy land therewith, or apply it in some other way for the benefit of the country of their nativity.

The trend of the prevailing opinion in this respect is very comprehensibly illustrated in a most enthusiastic exposé of Mr. Sigmund Kornfeld, the director of the "Hungarian Credit Bank," which appeared in the public press recently, and also in his speeches and lectures, in the course of which he proved logically the wonderful advantages of Hungarian immigration to the United States, citing, among other things, that through his bank alone 139,000,000 crowns had come into the country from the United States during last year, and that in certain counties the value of land had increased to unheard-of proportions. He advocates absolutely emigration en masse to the United States, advising those who heed him to do what those of their countrymen have been and are doing, who had been in America and are still there, saying literally, "Let all go who can, earn all the money they can, learn the practical ways of the American laborer, and come home with both the money and experience thus gained."

Six months previous Mr. Braun had made another report, which also makes very interesting reading. In it he says:

I believe I have shown conclusively in my various reports that several European governments, and more particularly the Governments of Italy and Austria-Hungary, are encouraging the temporary exodus to this country of those of their people whom they can not support and that they employ every possible means to keep these aliens grouped together in this country and under their influence for the purpose of avoiding their assimilation with our customs and institutions; and I have likewise shown in these reports that considerable propaganda is carried on in the United States to assist these Governments in their attempts. There is, in the first place, the foreign priest and the minister, who preaches to the foreign-born residents of this country that their greatest sin would be to forswear allegiance to the country of their nativity and become American citizens. * * *

In the countries whence we get the kind of immigration above mentioned they have laws permitting them to expel any foreigner whom they please to term "obnoxious," and Great Britain, in my opinion, very wisely inserted in her alien bill an expulsion clause of "undesirable aliens." In the countries from which we get the kind of immigration herein described no priest, minister, or school-teacher can officiate unless he is a citizen of that country, while here in the United States we have hundred and hundreds, and possibly thousands, of clergymen and school-teachers who pursue their professions without ever thinking of becoming citizens of this country. One Hungarian, Polish, or Slavish church after the other is being built and subsidized by foreign governments, and most of these churches teach "anti-Americanism" rather than the preaching of the gospel. To substantiate more effectively that this is no idle statement I attach hereto a copy of a Hungarian newspaper entitled "Magyarok Csillaga" (Hungarian Star), of July 20, 1905, published at McKeesport, Pa., by the Rev. Kalman Kovats, Roman Catholic priest of the Hungarian Church of that city. In this paper a report about the dedication of a new Hungarian Roman Catholic Church at Connellsville is printed. Said dedication took place on the 16th day of July, 1905, and a stenographic report of the oration of the Rev. Bela Lorik discloses the fact that this church was built not only for religious purposes, but also for the glory of Hungary, and for the purpose of fostering Magyar patriotism. I translate for your information a few sentences:

"It is not the first time that I open my lips before you, dear brethren and compatriots, for since one and a half years am I laboring here with you in loving unison, to the end that we may create for yourselves, true believing Hungarians, in this truly weeping valley, a house of the Lord which is the entrance to heaven, for the salvation of our souls, and for the fostering and redeeming of our Magyar national spirit and sentiment in the midst of this hundredfold conglomeration of nationalties. * * *

"My God, here in America, in this Godless hemisphere, where nothing is holy and everything is business, a small number of Hungarians have done wonders. * * *

"The Hungarian people must not deny themselves, but, on the contrary, even though living in Africa or Australia, among the savage pagans, they must not forget their sweet fatherland, the one-thousand-year-old beautiful Magyar land, spotted with thousands of hills and filled with balmy air, where the black bread that is wetted by our tears is sweeter than here the finest honeyed cakes and pastries."

In all the speeches and lectures and sermons these priests and ministers do not utter a syllable of gratitude for the incomparable privileges granted them and their people, who are permitted to come to these hospitable shores to make an honest living and partake liberally of our bounty; not one word about the millions and millions of dollars which by the liberality of our law they are enabled to send to their native country annually, and this spirit is fostered alike in most of the publications printed in foreign languages in this country, the principal aim of which seems to be, and is, to encourage and foster the nativistic ideas of the old fatherland.

Every once in a while emissaries sent by foreign governments come to this country to visit these alien colonies under the guise of studying American conditions, while, in truth and in fact, they journey hither for no other purpose and with no other object in view but that of grouping and organizing their countrymen and spreading among them the lasting influence of their respective home governments.

I need but recall in this connection the recent visit to this country of Herr Franz Kaltenbrunn, imperial and royal councilor of the ministry of the interior of Austria, who during his stay here visited every place where Austrians are grouped together in colonies or semicolonies, spreading the spirit above mentioned, and who, upon his return to New York City, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Austrian Association of the City of New York, when called upon to speak, indulged in this sentiment: "That, in view of the fact that this association was liberally subsidized by the Austrian Government, it should extend no aid or assistance to any but such Austrians who actually remained Austrian subjects, though residing in this country."

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to represent on this floor thousands of sturdy, industrious American workingmen. They till the soil, they pursue the various callings that require willing hands, strong arms, and strong backs, and yet yield but a very modest return for the labor done from early morn till the sun sets. They are the very bone and sinew of American citizenship. Their frugal mode of living keeps them healthy in body and mind. They are God-fearing, loyal, patriotic, loving men whose thoughts center in the welfare of their families and in devotion to State and nation. Together with their millions of brethren throughout the land they have a right to demand a square deal; to insist upon such protection as this great Government can afford them against the spoliation of the sources whence they derive a livelihood. And is it not a spoliation of these sources, Mr. Chairman, when in one year $70,000,000 are taken from this country by European laborers who come here, aided and encouraged by their governments, without a thought of permanent domicile, but simply to gather what money they can in a few months, hoard it, and then fly back to their native hovels, only to repeat the process year after year?

Far be it from me, Mr. Chairman, to raise my voice against the kind of immigration which helped, and to-day is helping, to make this country the wonder of the world. Let us welcome those who join us in the great work in which, under the Providence of the Almighty, this nation is engaged. Let all who will enter who earnestly prize the boon of American citizenship; whose labor, in whatever field, will make for the progress of our people and the greatness of our Republic. We have room here for many more millions of this kind. But let us put up the bars against the great hordes that come for what spoil they may find, and whose coming can but serve to make harder the lot and heavier the burden of the American workingman.

I resent the criticism that I have heard from certain sources of the patriotic organizations that have in view the protection of our people from these undesirable classes whose presence among us tends to lower the standard of civilization and who, if they continue to come at the present ratio of increase, will inevitably change completely our nationality sooner or later.

Those of us who believe in protection have urged in support of it that its primary purpose is to protect our laborers against competition with the products of the pauper labor of other countries. I still believe in that doctrine. But is it consistent to legislate to keep the products of pauper labor out of our country and fail to legislate to keep the pauper laborers themselves out, when their presence here is much more harmful than merely the products of their labor?

The gentleman who is in charge of this bill has assured us that the erection of the building at Philadelphia will facilitate the enforcement of existing law regarding immigration. Believing, therefore, that the passage of the bill will tend to a more rigid enforcement of the law and thus help keep out some undesirable immigrants who might get in if the building is not erected, I shall vote for the appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add much to enliven this debate. It seems to be a discussion largely participated in by the newer Members, and I wish to congratulate them upon the very active part they have so far taken upon this occasion and on the very creditable manner in which they have acquitted themselves. But, coming from the city of New York, a city necessarily more familiar with this question of immigration than any other, and therefore more deeply interested, it has been my pleasing duty in the past six years to visit Ellis Island upon numerous occasions. Upon all of these, I want to say for the benefit of the House, I have seen but few persons whom I would regard as undesirable immigrants. I may say in this connection that my ancestors emigrated to this country, entering the port of Philadelphia in 1710, long enough ago at least for the present generation to have forgotten the condition of the immigrant station at Philadelphia. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many came over that year?

Mr. GOULDEN. There were many thousands who came. Some 40,000, I think, in 1710.

Mr. BENNET of New York. From the present appearance of the immigrant station at Philadelphia, it is fair to suppose that it was there when the gentleman's ancestors came over in 1710. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOULDEN. I have no doubt of that. But in reference to the class of men who come into this country now, I know there is a fear permeating the country that we are getting a lot of undesirable immigrants here. In my personal experience, witnessing the incoming of these immigrants upon so many occasions, I want, if possible, to allay the fears of this House by saying to you that 95 per cent of the men, women, and children whom I have seen landing and on Ellis Island I should welcome with open arms. They are going to make a desirable class of citizens, according to my careful observation. In the city of New York we have scores of schools, each of them accommodating three to four thousand children, of whom 90 to 100 per cent are either foreign born or of foreign-born parents. I am glad and able to testify personally to this, because for years I was connected with the public schools of New York. I wish to say that those children are taken in hand by our splendid corps of teachers, the best in the country, and magnificent citizens made of them. I am a firm believer that our great system of public education is going to take care of the children of all immigrants, desirable or otherwise. I deny that there is any considerable percentage of the undesirables admitted into the country. The immigrants are the class of people who do our manual labor, as has been so ably and eloquently expressed by my learned colleague from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. My own district, with its 450,000 people, is not yet fully developed, and we are obliged to have—in fact, must have—these people to do the real labor, the work of digging trenches, the foundations for houses and sewers, regulating and grading our splendid street system—all that class of manual labor; and I want to say to this House that but for the immigrants that came into the port of New York the last ten years we should not have progressed as we have done. Take the Borough of the Bronx, the northern borough and the most progressive of the five of the great city of New York, with a population in 1900 of 200,500, and to-day with a population of 400,000. Much of this development has been brought about by the men who have come in at Ellis Island with the aid of a public citizenship. Therefore, we ought to encourage their coming, for they are the class of men who, in my district at least, are making good citizens and doing excellent work in the upbuilding of the great and imperial city of New York.

Now, in reference to the question of the scarcity of labor, I am one of those unfortunate men known sometimes as an agriculturist. You know there is a difference between a farmer and an agriculturist. A farmer is the fellow who does the work and the agriculturist is the man who pays the bills. [Laughter and applause.] I am unfortunate enough to be an agriculturist, owning a couple of farms, and I can not obtain upon those farms the labor necessary for their cultivation. I am obliged to go to Ellis Island and ship from there laborers. As they become Americanized and go into other occupations, I have to go to Ellis Island again and try to secure men for these farms to assist in their cultivation. That is the case, I think, in general, everywhere, and in order that we may have somebody to work our lands I am in favor of all good immigration. I may add that these farms are in the grand old State of Maryland, where we generally find difficulty in securing labor.

And now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I do not entertain the pessimistic view of my friend from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN. I am an optimist, but my observations on this question of immigration lead me to believe that the country needs good, able-bodied men and women. The country need not fear for its institutions nor for the glorious progress we are making all along the lines of patriotic American citizenship.

This discussion has taken a very wide range, and I want to repeat what I said a little while ago, that I am heartily in favor of the bill that proposes to give the city of Philadelphia an immigrant station that is at least decent. I have no doubt that if my forefathers that came in here two hundred years ago could rise out of their graves they would dignify the situation as barbarous then as it is now. I think the bill should pass and we should treat these people who come in there as human beings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague, would like to ask me a question.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this increase of immigration would affect the wages of the laboring man.

Mr. GOULDEN. Not in the city of New York, nor in any section that I am familiar with.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. How will it be in the country at large?

Mr. GOULDEN. I should say no, emphatically, because you can not get the average American citizen of to-day to take the shovel and the pick. You can not get an Irishman, you can not get a German who will take the pick and shovel to-day and do the hard manual labor necessary to be done. Therefore I do not believe the immigrants are entering into any competition with American citizens.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Then why is it that the public works are reducing the wages of the laboring man on all sides and he is now tramping in order to make a living?

Mr. COCKRAN. Because the thieves have upset our financial system.

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; because the financial system is upset and demoralized.

Mr. COCKRAN. And the immigrant is the victim and not the cause of it.

Mr. GOULDEN. They charge the upsetting of the financial system to Wall street, but I repudiate that assertion and positively deny it. Wall street is not any more responsible for the present panic than other sections of the country. You have had your speculators, your gamblers, all over the country, and every part of it is as responsible for it as Wall street and New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. The immigrant had nothing to do with it; he is the victim.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that it takes men to make a nation?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; and good men who size up to the ideals of our citizenship; and I want to say that in the Spanish-American war when we called for volunteers, many of them were of foreign birth, as was the case in the civil war.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Then why are they going back to the other countries by thousands?

Mr. GOULDEN. On account of the financial condition.

Mr. COCKRAN. And thereby relieving the labor market.

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; and they have taken but a small portion of what they produced for the betterment of the country with them.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who was a distinguished member of the Immigration Commission, created by the immigration act passed last Congress, for his courtesy in yielding the floor to me for a short time.

I shall not detain the committee long, as my views upon the question of the immigration of aliens into the United States were fully expressed in a speech which I made upon the floor at the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

I believe in the restriction of immigration. This bill now before the committee is to provide for the erection of an immigration station at Philadelphia, Pa., and in the discussion of it there has arisen a debate involving the whole immigration question; and, inasmuch as this question has been injected, I feel constrained to reiterate my views upon the subject of immigration. As to the bill before the committee providing for a new immigration station at Philadelphia, I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], in the debate, if it had the favorable report of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and of the Immigration Commissioner, and he replied to my question that the bill had the approval and indorsement of both.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who was a member of the Immigration Commission, and who, as a member of that Commission, visited Europe last summer to make a study of the immigration question, and who is well known to be in favor of proper restrictions upon immigration, also states that in the discharge of official duties he visited the immigration station at Philadelphia, and that a new building is badly needed. I can therefore see no objection to the passage of this particular bill, because so long as we have immigration laws upon our statute books we must provide for the proper housing of the immigrants. Humanity and the execution of our existing laws require this much at the hands of Congress, and I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr BURNETT] in this respect.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that anyone who is in favor of a restriction of immigration desires to keep out of the United States good immigrants, the right kind of immigrants, and desirable immigration. We want immigrants in the South for our farms, mills, and manfuacturing interests, but we do not want the undesirable class of immigrants who have been flooding the country in recent years. That was the position taken by the governor of Virginia, Governor Swanson, in his inaugural address, and that is the position of many other prominent men in the South. Since the civil war the South has become one of the most progressive sections of the Union, and the development of both its agricultural and manufacturing interests has been most remarkable. In the cultivation of cotton, in the increase of its manufacturing interests, and the development within a comparatively recent period of new enterprises and new industries, the South challenges New England and every other section of our country to keep pace with its substantial progress.

The cotton crop in 1880 was 5,214,355 bales, in 1890 it was 7,123,775 bales, in 1900 it was 9,052,015 bales, in 1906 it was 13,500,000 bales. There are 814 operating cotton mills. During the past five years, while the world has averaged an increase of 9½ per cent in cotton spindles, the South has increased 41 per cent. From a very small beginning, cotton-seed-oil mills in the South have increased until the value of the manufactures from cotton seed has increased to many millions of dollars. The South is to-day both prosperous and progressive, and its enterprising citizens have aided in its magnificent development, and in their veins flows the best and purest strain of Anglo-Saxon blood. We have one race problem, which has been for more than forty years a great burden to the South.

I believe it is the sentiment of our people that, while we would like to have immigration for the development of the South's great resources, we do not care to have imposed upon us any possibility of dealing with another race problem. In discussing restricted immigration we are not advocating the exclusion of all immigrants from the United States. Many of the immigrants who came into this country in its early history in later years have made good citizens and united with us to develop the country and have been devoted to our free institutions.

We are not talking in this debate of a class of immigrants who come in from countries like England, Ireland, Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Holland, and the countries of northern Europe. If they do not come within the excluded classes, these men, and men like these, have always made good citizens. They become assimilated with our population, and they come to make the United States a home and permanent abiding place. But in the past few years through many influences, and by means of lax laws, which have now been amended by the act of the last Congress, passed February 20, 1907, the bars against immigration and the restrictions imposed upon immigration have been evaded to such an extent as to admit many undesirable citizens from many races of the Old World who are incapable of assimilation with our population, and do not help us to build up the country; who are dangerous to our institutions, and in a few years will return to the country from whence they came, carrying the money which they earned here in their pockets.

In speaking of the class of immigrants who should be admitted into the country, both Madison and Jefferson said that we should only admit those who are capable of assimilation in the first place; and in the second place, who come to make this country a permanent home. Of course, Madison and Jefferson and those statesmen of the early days of the Republic never contemplated any such class of immigration as we have had in recent years, or the horde of foreign-born people who are now surging into the country.

I thought, when I spoke upon this subject before the last Congress, that we had reached the flood tide of immigration, but the reports of the Commissioner-General of Immigration and of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor show that there has been a very large increase for the year 1907 over the year 1906. The statistics show that during the last fiscal year 1,285,349 immigrants came into the country, while in 1906 there were 1,100,735, an increase of 184,614 over 1906; and an increase of 258,850 over 1905, or an increase over the year of 1906 of more than 17 per cent, and over 1905 of more than 25 per cent. So that with a population of 80,000,000 in the United States, one and one-quarter million of foreign-born people are coming to our shores each year. The statistics in the reports of the Commissioner-General of Immigration and Secretary of Commerce and Labor further show that a very large percentage of these immigrants are from southern Europe and Asia Minor, and a comparatively small percentage from the northern European races. Of the aliens admitted during the last fiscal year, the Commissioner-General of Immigration says that about 30 per cent were illiterate, and that 873,923, or about two-thirds of those admitted, had less than $50 each in their possession. These hordes of people coming from southern Europe and Asiatic countries compete with American labor and are a menace.

My friend from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], for whom I have a very great respect, says that there is an unreasonable fear as to such competition with American labor. But, apart from the fact that very many of these immigrants are most undesirable, it does not seem to me from the statistics and the facts before us that such fear is unreasonable, and I want to say to my friend from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] that behind that apprehension and fear is a very large body of American citizens and many organizations of laboring people of this country. If these people performed the kind of labor American citizens can not and will not do, certainly these labor organizations would not be so persistent in their opposition to that kind of immigration, and they must have some good ground upon which to base their fears and apprehension.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have said about all that I care to say upon this subject, having expressed myself fully and clearly in a debate upon this subject during the last Congress. I shall not oppose the bill for the erection of this station, because we must take care of the immigrants who come here under existing laws, being careful to see that these laws are enforced, but I do believe we should keep out of the country the undesirable classes who have been coming here. We want good immigration in the South and throughout the country, but we do not want undesirable immigration. It is a menace to our country and it is competition with the American workman.

I believe that is all I now have to say upon this subject. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask my distinguished friend from North Carolina—and I say friend advisedly—what he means by the word "undesirable?"

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Why, the gentleman knows that is very difficult to define, but I think I have defined what I mean when I say that class of immigrants who can not be assimilated into the American body politic.

Mr. GOULDEN. What class are they? I have been watching the subject for twenty years myself.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If the gentleman wants me to file a bill of particulars and specify, while it is difficult to do this, I would say probably certain classes who have been coming to the United States from southern Italy and from Asia Minor.

I am informed by the report of the Commissioner of Immigration that many of those who come here from Syria return to their own country just as soon as they have accumulated a sufficient amount of money, although they have become naturalized American citizens, and they return to their former home with the money they have made in their pockets. Such people are not desirable, and they come within the class excluded by the great statesmen President Jefferson and President Madison, when they declared that we wanted only those who were capable of assimilation and who come to make America a permanent home and abiding place, to live with us under the flag of the country, and to help us develop its resources and protect and maintain its free government. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, it is with the deepest regret that I have heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] make so many unjust remarks while this bill has been under consideration. I regret particularly that they have seen fit to class as undesirable citizens those people who come to our shores from the Old World, not only for the honest purpose of building homes for themselves in this country, but that they may partake of that freedom and liberty of which we so proudly boast. Had these remarks been made by gentlemen destitute of knowledge on the subject, or by gentlemen whose opinions are not entitled to the thoughtful attention of those before whom they are given, I should have paid no attention to them. But coming as they do from gentlemen of wide experience and education, from gentlemen who should know that what they have said can not be true, I can not allow their statements to stand unchallenged.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] was asked whom he meant when he spoke of certain classes of foreigners as being undesirable, and he refused to answer. Similarly, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] declined to say what particular classes of people he would call undesirable. He spoke of 75 per cent of our foreign population as coming under that head, but when he was pressed for an answer as to what nationality he meant, he had no answer to give. Both of these gentlemen, by declining to define their statements more closely, convicted themselves of having spoken without proper care or without thought of the harm they would do a worthy and deserving class of American citizens. [Applause.]

Now, I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that for twenty-seven years of my life I have lived and worked in Chicago, in the very midst of these people to whom the gentlemen have referred as undesirable citizens. I believe, therefore, that I am in a better position to discuss this question than any of these gentlemen who have spoken so carelessly of those people who have come to our shores from abroad and who have done so much to build up the American nation and who have added so greatly to its wealth and progress. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURPHY], who spoke so ably in defense of our immigrants a few minutes ago, and whose arguments were so logical that no man can successfully controvert them, spoke of living in a community where six different languages are spoken. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I come from a community where not six, but all the languages of the earth are spoken. I wish to say that I come in contact with these people every day of my life. I have lived among them; they are my people, and I am one of them. [Applause.] I know them as no other man here knows them, and I have watched them in their brave struggles to adapt themselves to the conditions of this country. I have seen them come to America with their faces lighted with hope at the prospect of living in a land of freedom and liberty, and I have seen them struggle long and bravely, and sometimes against overwhelming odds, to realize those hopes.

But as hard as their struggles have been, and notwithstanding the severe handicaps under which they have labored, I want to say, with all the strength in me, that it has been the exception rather than the rule for these people to abandon their fight to live honestly and virtuously. I want to say emphatically that it is seldom that these people allow themselves to sink into the class of citizenship that these gentlemen would be justified in calling undesirable. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I think I may justly claim for Chicago, my home, that it is one of the greatest if not the greatest city of the world. It is a city that is recognized as one of the wonders of the age, and I want to say to you that no man with a desire to be fair would deny to the foreign-born citizens of Chicago their just share in the making of the city's greatness. [Applause.] The foreigners of Chicago did much toward building the city. To a very large degree they helped to make the city what it is, and they are to-day doing their full share in maintaining the city at its high level. Chicago without its foreign element would have no place among the cities of the earth. Take from it to-day its foreigners and to-morrow the wheels of its factories would cease to turn. Its mills would be forced to close, and it would realize a condition of industrial stagnancy the like of which it never knew before.

The population of Chicago is greater than that of either the State of Iowa or Alabama, and in view of this fact I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Alabama a few questions. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] if he is aware of the fact that the population of his State has been decreasing for several years? I wonder if the gentleman from Iowa would consider it impertinent of me to ask if there is a possibility of relation between the decrease of population in his State and his annual speeches in Congress against immigration? Also, I might suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he would learn, should he care to consult the census reports, that over one-half of what is left of his State's population is composed of foreign-born and foreign-parentage population. He would learn that this population is composed of members from the Austrian, Bohemian, Danish, German, Polish, Irish, Russian, Slavonian, and Scandinavian nationalities. Are these undesirable citizens, I wonder? No, indeed. They are just the contrary. They are the most worthy, useful, and desirable citizens that can be found anywhere in our land. Well, then, who are these undesirable citizens to whom the gentleman refers? Furthermore, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] if he remembers that only last year his State was clamoring for labor with which to move its crops. And I should like to respectfully inform him that this labor was not available.

And is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] aware of the fact that his State also was sorely in need of labor last year? Does he recall that thousands and thousands of dollars' worth of cotton remained unpicked in the fields because there was no labor with which to gather the harvest? Isn't it about time for these gentlemen to stand a little closer to the interests of their own States? Is it fitting for these gentlemen to make speeches against immigration, which means labor, when their own States have more work to do than can be done by their present population? These gentlemen are not unlike the old maid who sought to give advice to the mother of a dozen on how to properly bring up a family. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, what these foreigners have done for Chicago they have done for the West and the Northwest generally. Go out along our railroads, which extend, as the very arteries of our national life, into the great granaries of the West and Northwest, and you will find there, working everywhere, building railroads, working in the forests and on the farms, and in the mines and factories, engaged in every kind of enterprise and industry that helps to develop and increase the great wealth of our country, those very foreigners to whom these gentlemen have referred as undesirable citizens. And I wish to say here that one of the most important and significant features of the great work that is being done by these foreigners is that a large per cent of it is so hard and so toilsome that the average American workman would not be content to do it. Practically all the hardest and most wearisome, yet withal the most constructive and valuable work that is being done in America to-day, is being done by these foreigners to whom the gentlemen refer as undesirable citizens. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is not only unjust to speak of these people in this way, but that it does an honest and worthy class of citizens a great wrong. [Applause.]

Nearly every day, Mr. Chairman, we read in the newspapers that there has been a terrible mine accident somewhere or that there has been a frightful explosion in one of our mills or factories. And always, with these accounts, there is a statement that most of the workmen killed were foreigners. I will venture to say that an overwhelming per cent of the workmen who are killed annually in American mines and factories are foreigners. Thus do these undesirable citizens of whom these gentlemen speak sacrifice their very lives that America may rank at the head of industrial nations.

The statement has been made by the gentleman that the foreigner is forcing wages down in this country, and this I emphatically deny. It is a well-known economic principle that demand increases with production, and when the foreigner, by his labor, increases the American product, he raises rather than lowers not only his own condition, but that of the American laborer as well. This is why the West has been developed from a waste of prairie into the richest and most productive region in the world. The story of increased wealth everywhere is the story of increased labor that preceded it. It is exactly for this reason that the South, lying dormant and inactive under the burden of her undeveloped natural wealth, is clamoring for the immigration from Europe.

Mr. Chairman, I would rather lose my power of speech than to advocate any measure that would prove detrimental to the cause of labor. [Applause.] There is not a man in this body who will go further to aid the cause of labor than I will. The circumstances and surroundings of my life have been such as would permit me to see and to understand the hardships and the sacrifices that workingmen must endure in order to gain a living. We all know and statistics prove that notwithstanding the great influx of immigrants during the last few years wages have increased from 12 to 14 per cent. And had it not been for the fact that the criminal and thieving trusts and the unlawful combinations, aided by a high protective tariff, have raised the prices of the necessities of life so outrageously, and had not the manipulations of the Wall street gamblers and speculators, aided by a faulty currency system, thrown our country into a panic, these last few years would have been the most prosperous ones this country ever had. It is the trusts and the unlawful combinations, rather than immigration, that has kept the American laboring man from deriving the full and just benefits and rewards of his labor.

In the years 1905, 1906, and 1907 immigration to this country from Europe was heavier than it ever was before, and allow me to call your attention to the fact that never before was the country so prosperous as it was during those years. Isn't this significant? Doesn't this show that there is a direct relation between immigration and high wages? Go through the East and the Middle West and you will find wages a hundred per cent higher than they are in the South, yet all of the immigrants from Europe settle in the East and the Middle West and very few of them reach the South. How, then, can it be successfully maintained that immigration has anything to do with keeping wages at a low level? I think that if the gentlemen will study the situation carefully they will find that immigration has just the opposite effect, and that without this great army of workers from Europe we could have had neither increased wages nor increased prosperity.

To prove to the gentlemen that the country has been materially benefited by immigration let me cite a few figures. In 1871 our immigration was 321,350, and for the following ten years it averaged something over 219,000 a year. In 1871 our exports were only $442,820,078, while our imports were $520,223,684, or a balance of trade against us of $77,401,000. For the six years subsequent to 1870, when our immigration was at such a low tide, the balance of trade against us was the enormous amount of $243,706,469.

During the last ten years our immigration averaged 722,122 a year, or nearly three and one-half times as much as it did in the years from 1870 to 1876, inclusive. And for these years we find that our exports exceeded our imports by an average of $516,617,819 each year, and that the total amount in our favor for those years was $5,161,781,913. From these figures it can be readily seen that without our increased immigration we could not have produced the great wealth that allows us to pile up such a tremendous balance of trade, and which allows us to rank as the foremost nation of the world.

Mr. Chairman, my district in Chicago is peopled by representatives of nearly every nation in the world. It is peopled by representatives of sturdy races whose struggles for liberty and freedom date back to periods before the western world had a place in the dreams of men. It is peopled by men and women from the countries of Europe, who, oppressed in their own lands, long looked forward to American citizenship that they might for themselves and children enjoy that freedom and that liberty of which they had heard and dreamed.

And now it is proposed to build a suitable building for just such people as they are; a building in which to welcome them when they come to our shores. Mr. Chairman, when considering this question, we must look beyond and see the real purpose with which these foreigners come to America. We must recognize the fact that this purpose is none other than the honest one of building and establishing for themselves in this land their homes, and of becoming worthy and permanent American citizens. Mr. Chairman, I am proud to say that I come from the greatest cosmopolitan city of the world, the city of Chicago. I am proud to say that I come from a community where I have long had an opportunity to watch these worthy people and to know what sort of citizens they are. I could not, without proving a traitor to both my conscience and my friends and fellow-citizens in Chicago, do aught but speak in favor of appropriating this money for this purpose. Let us build this building at Philadelphia, to give these worthy foreigners a welcome when they come, and to show them that our country ever extends the warm hand of sympathy and fellowship to the oppressed peoples of the earth. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I claim the position of an immigrant, or, possibly more than that, of an imported Irish lad brought over here in his mother's arms, and possibly the fare was paid by a poor aunt, who earned the money in America and earned it in Pittsburg, Pa. [Applause.] It has been my lot to dig coal in the mines of Pennsylvania and Ohio, to work side by side with my "buttie," bearing in and wedging down the ore. I know what contributes value, what worth the immigrant is to this country. I have employed them for the last thirty years. I have employed from 100 to 300, and at times a larger number than that. I know their honesty of purpose and that 90 per cent of the immigrants coming to this country come with an honest endeavor to better their condition. They come here with a will power and stamina that tells. They come here because of that instinct and ambition in their nature to better their condition, and in some instances they outstrip our American boy; but I want to be correctly understood that there is no American truer to the American flag and cause of American labor and the just payment for the toil of American sons because it is his birthright than SAMUEL MCMILLAN. [Applause.] But at the same time I want no one brought to this country who is not a worker. I do not want atheists or anarchists or nihilists (or any other 'ists), except "workists." But when I think of what the immigrant has done for Pennsylvania and for the city of Philadelphia in contributing to its wealth and the mere pittance of $250,000 asked for to build an entrance gate to welcome them, I ask where would your furnaces have been puddled, where would your mines have been dug and worked, where would your great iron industries and constructions that now tower and almost kiss the heavens have been were it not for the immigrants? How many Americans to-day are working in the mines, how many are in the rolling mills? Ask yourselves that, gentlemen. I am a workman. I am an employer of workmen. I have been up every rung in the ladder and, gentlemen, I know whereof I speak. [Applause.] It is claimed by the Member from Iowa that immigration is a hindrance to American wage-earners. That I deny. It is the immigrant that bears the burden of hard labor, toiling in the under stratus of labor, rejected by the American workman, and fills his mission and has contributed his full share to the building up of our great country. I say that every man, woman, or child, no matter from what country or clime he comes, who is healthy and strong and who comes to our shores is far better for our country than purchased gold for the reason that they are living factors of our great industries, and the great majority of them remain with us. It is claimed that they have taken the bulk of their earnings back with them. That is true in some degree with the Italian, but with no other race. On the other hand, how many bring money with them? I am not one of those who decry the foreign element and their influence in our country. I claim that the leaven of American principles and doctrine is sufficiently strong to successfully combat and conquer every foe of its institutions, and the American wage-earner is absolutely safe in his position because of his superior skill and knowledge and will always command his worth as the most intelligent son of toil and should receive the highest pay and reward for his faithful labors. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] where he gets his authority for saying that the people of the South have about arrived at the point where they are willing to surrender their franchise laws in order to keep the negro in the South?

Mr. COCKRAN. I did not say that, Mr. Chairman, nor anything of the kind. If the gentleman wants me to repeat what I said I am very ready to do it.

Mr. BYRD. Repeat it.

Mr. COCKRAN. I said this: That the one hope of maintaining your white supremacy in the South is to encourage the immigration of white laborers, for if you shut these out the time will come when the very necessity of your being will compel you to deal with the negro on the basis he may choose to establish, or else your fields will not be cultivated. I wish to say that here I am merely indulging in a spirit of prophecy, where the gentleman is as free to reach a conclusion as I am.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Chairman, above all things we are going to stand by our franchise laws, though every negro should leave that section. The perpetual reign of intelligence overshadows all labor considerations with the people of the South. To them there are other aspirations more worthy to be followed than striving to extract pelf from the sweat and blood of the miserable African. I come from a State where the negro more largely predominates than in any other State of the Union, and in which there is an increasing demand for intelligent labor; yet, greatly to the appreciation of our people, the negroes are "taking the wings of the morning" and are rapidly leaving that section. They are drifting from the farms to the towns, sawmills, levees, and railroads, and from these they are going to every part of the nation. We think it better for them to go—better for themselves and far better for the nation. This dissemination of the race will introduce the true character of the negro to the white people of every section. Then our Northern friends will know him as we know him; love him as we love him; and befriend him as we have befriended him. In this manner his status in American society will become fixed. He will no longer be regarded as a prince in one section and a vassal in another. As it is he can not tell whether "he is or is to be." Let this veil of uncertainty be removed from his future, and a racial blessing will be his reward, and the end of the misguided criticisms of the South will be the nation's victory.

Nor would I have my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] believe for one moment that the Southern people desire an influx of irresponsible foreigners in order to maintain white supremacy. The natural increase of our people and the coming to our section of thousands of the best citizens of the North and West will be amply sufficient to take care of this question for many years to come. But suppose we did need more white people in the South for this purpose, then what assistance could we hope to receive from the horde of miserable creatures now being dumped upon our shores, a vast majority of whom represent the very dregs of racial degradation? Would their coming not inflict upon us another race problem more dangerous than the one we now have? All this eloquence about assimilation with the American people is the merest nonsense. You might as well expect the waters of the snow-fed brooklet flowing into the Stygian Gulf to remain sweet and pure as to hope for the blending of our blood with their blood without accelerating our own racial degeneracy. No; let others do as they may, but I dare say that the people whom I represent will witness the coming and going of many generations ere they will assent to the mingling of their blood with that of many classes of these degenerates.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we can well do without even the negro as a laborer. There are fewer colored people in Mississippi to-day than ten years ago, and the State is being blessed by their departure. The honest white laborers are largely doing our farm work. The old plantation system is rapidly passing away. It is being supplanted by a multiplicity of small farms, owned and cultivated by an intelligent and industrious class of white farmers. They subscribe to all the virtues of an enlightened civilization. They believe in the education of their children—in schools, in homes, in churches, in society, in Christianity, in God, and in their country—and I for one will never vote to compel them to labor in competition with a being or horde of beings who have forgotten the God that made them, who never knew an obligation to society, who are void of patriotism, who believe in rearing their offspring in ignorance and vice, and who can live on less than one-half it takes to bring comfort to the home of the average white farmer.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. Where will you get the white men to cultivate the land?

Mr. BYRD. They will come from your country and from all over this nation.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is right. The gentleman has got the idea.

Mr. BYRD. The departure of the negro will be followed by the incoming of industrious white people from other parts of the Union. Be assured that as many will come as we need. Far better will it be for many of our farms to again become the birthplace of the wild flower than for the splendid citizenship illustrated in the Southern farmer to be impoverished by competition in the cotton fields with the pauperized labor of Europe.

The day that brings to the farms of the South hordes of Dago, Chinese, Japanese, and other cheap laborers of this class will be the darkest that ever cast a shadow across that sunny land. It will mean reducing the price of cotton to 5 cents per pound, and consequently will plaster every farm with a mortgage and bring misery and want to many homes now happy and prosperous.

My objection to immigration does not extend to the worthy class of immigrants from England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Sweden, and some other European countries. This class have made this country great, and for one I say let the few now coming continue to come. Never would I close the doors of this Republic to the ambitious young men of this blood, who, in order to escape the environments of opportunity in Europe, come for the avowed purpose of improving their own condition as well as aiding in the expansion of growing civilization. This class have made splendid citizens. They have risen to honor and to fortune. So let them come. But what about the hordes from the Orient and from the decaying races of southern Europe? During the fiscal year 1907, 1,285,349 immigrants came into the United States, which equals the total population of Mississippi. The following table will show the nativity of the immigrants that came into this country during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907:

| Austria-Hungary | 338,452 |
| Italy, including Sicily and Sardinia | 285,731 |
| Russian Empire and Finland | 258,943 |
| Total Asia | 40,524 |
| France, including Corsica | 9,731 |
| German Empire | 37,807 |
| Norway | 22,133 |
| Ireland | 34,530 |
| Scotland | 19,740 |

Can we not at once see from this table that the decaying nations of Europe are emptying their jails and pauper houses upon our shores, and can we not further see that the best blood of Europe is rapidly ceasing to flow this way? There was a time in our history when two-thirds of our immigrants came from people of our own blood in western Europe. Now, they come slowly, because they fear the evils certain to follow in the wake of this maelstrom of pauperized humanity.

There is one thing I would like to impress upon some of the gentlemen who have discussed this question, and that is, that there is such a thing as too much labor. If there should be sent to the South as many foreign laborers as some gentlemen think we need, the very next cotton crop would be twenty millions of bales, and the price therefor would immediately decrease to 5 cents per pound. It is useless to discuss the evils that would necessarily follow. We are receiving a profitable price to-day for the great Southern staple, because of the world's demand for the same. Upon the price of the staple largely depends Southern prosperity, and whenever we increase the crop to an amount greater than the world's consumption the former hardships of that section will return again. There is practically no limit to cotton production. Millions of acres of our most fruitful lands have never been touched by the plowshare. In order to keep down overproduction and, consequently, depreciation in price, the farmers in recent years have held many conventions for the avowed purpose of reducing the production. I again assert that I can conceive of no calamity more dangerous to the well-being of the South than the importation of cheap labor into that section.

Mr. FAVROT. Is it not a fact that one-sixth of the cotton crop of the South is unpicked because you have not the labor?

Mr. BYRD. There is not 1 per cent of it unpicked, and not one-half of 1 per cent will remain unpicked.

Mr. FAVROT. I passed through last week, and I found that one-sixth of the cotton was unpicked because you could not obtain labor.

Mr. BURNETT. You passed in a Pullman car, did you not?

Mr. BYRD. Through what States did you pass?

Mr. FAVROT. Tennessee, North Carolina, Mississippi, South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana, and I found there that one-third of the cotton had not been picked because you could not get labor.

Mr. BURNETT. Did you ever pick any cotton?

Mr. FAVROT. Yes; I have.

Mr. BYRD. I want to say to my friend that he is evidently mistaken. What State are you from?

Mr. FAVROT. I live in Louisiana.

Mr. BURNETT. In the sugar belt?

Mr. FAVROT. In the cotton belt.

Mr. BYRD. I want to say that there may be some cotton unpicked, but only a small amount.

Mr. FAVROT. I say that it represents one-sixth of the crop down there to-day.

Mr. BYRD. I again say the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FAVROT. I have been there since you have.

Mr. BYRD. There is scarcely a bale ungathered within 50 miles of my town.

Mr. COCKRAN. As I understand the gentleman's apprehension, if they are to have abundance of labor in Mississippi, and throughout the South, the cotton crop will be increased enormously.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. And does the gentleman have an apprehension of too much abundance?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAVROT. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BYRD. Permit me to respond to the gentleman from New York first. I want to say to him that there is such a thing as too much of a good thing; that is, overproduction.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not think so.

Mr. BYRD. I want to make a little argument on this point. So long as we are separated by the wall of protection from foreign markets, on which we depend for the consumption of two-thirds of our cotton, just so long will there be such a thing as overproduction. Whenever we have access to the 500,000,000 of half-naked people of the Orient and South America, who want our products, then you may come around and we will reason together about increasing production in the South.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Would that increase the consumption here?

Mr. BYRD. Yes; we would have more people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BYRD. I want to say to my friend from Iowa——

Mr. BURNETT. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRD. I would like to ask the gentleman to state his question again.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I wanted to know if we were able to manufacture all the cotton in the world, wherein the breaking down of the wall of protection would create greater consumption here.

Mr. BYRD. That is something it seems you Republicans can never understand. You believe the United States is all the world. You forget the six hundred millions to the south and west of us, who are crying for American cotton goods. Now, what I want is to open our doors and give every naked heathen a cotton shirt. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because you can now sell your surplus there just the same as if there was no tariff here.

Mr. BYRD. That simply shows that you do not know what you are talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The foreigner has the same right to buy here now that he would have if you repealed our tariff.

Mr. BYRD. What we need is open doors and an open commerce like England has. She is our agent for selling our cotton products in foreign markets. We should become our own agent. While England is finding a market for eleven or twelve millions of bales for us we could, by adopting her policy, join hands with her and find markets for twenty millions.

Mr. FAVROT. The gentleman has got away from the subject. The question is foreign immigration. Now, the gentleman knows and I know——

Mr. BYRD. Do not argue. Just ask your question.

Mr. FAVROT. You know and I know that you give a negro 50 acres of land and he will cultivate, maybe, 7 acres of it. You give an Italian 50 acres of land and that entire 50 acres will produce something. Now, does not that add to the productive capacity of the country and add to the wealth of the country?

Mr. BYRD. But when you take the man who tills 50 acres of cotton and who lives on one-fourth the amount that an intelligent white man could live on and support his family decently, when you put this white man in competition with a man who does not believe in any of the essentials of American society, who substitutes the voodoo doctor for the physician, who believes not in Sunday schools and churches, who does not comprehend the necessity of education for his children nor the obligation that he owes to society, then you are reducing him to a plane of the most miserable wretches of God's creation.

Mr. FAVROT. Oh, no; you are mistaken about that.

Mr. BYRD. I know well of what I speak. I have witnessed the degradation of certain of this foreign element in my own section, who prefer a hut to a home, who believe not in the American idea of home comforts, who prefer a monkey and an organ to a piano, who pack their children away like sardines in their crowded huts. In other words, most of them live a life of utter degradation, and I am not one to make the honest yeomanry of my section labor in competition with such people. [Applause.]

Mr. FAVROT. I want to correct the gentleman. The Italian in my country sends his children to school, and he will walk many miles to do it, and the next generation of Italians are as good Americans as the gentleman from Texas and myself.

Mr. BYRD. When I say Italians I do not mean all of that race. We are willing for that class to come, my friend. [Laughter.] On that kind of immigrants we do not have to spend a quarter of a million to get them in. They will come though they have to climb in. I have the pleasure of saying that one of Mississippi's governors was of this descent, but not from the Sicilian class, commonly called "dagoes." Hundreds of them may be seen in New Orleans to-day, three generations from Italy, still pushing carts, yelling "Banans! Banans!! Banans!!!" [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I hope this House will not pass this measure, for in so doing we will be giving the approval of the American people to an increased importation of this undesirable class. Our vote for this bill will be published all over southern Europe, and will be accepted by all classes as an invitation to come. In the name of reason, why should we insist on swelling the already overflowing tide? Have we not enough of the unemployed and destitute here now? Twenty thousand of the unemployed of this same class are now marching the streets of Chicago, defying the police and begging for work. Similar scenes have recently occurred in St. Louis. Every industrial center is overflowing with hundreds of laborers who have no way of earning a support, and if the present conditions continue, we may look for another Coxey army to march on this Capitol. One must be blind, indeed, not to observe the danger lurking in these labor troubles. A man confronting his starving wife and children becomes a desperate factor in society. He will embrace socialism with a smile and anarchy with a shout. Some great French writer has said that an army of the uprising peasantry of France was more dangerous than the revolt of all her imperial legions. He spoke the truth.

The report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration reveals startling facts relative to immigration. It shows that of the immigrants admitted in 1907, 46,234 had reached or passed the prime of life; 337,573 could neither read nor write, and 5,829 could read but not write, making the number of the illiterates more than 30 per cent. Eight hundred and seventy-three thousand nine hundred and twenty-three had less than $50 each, while only 107,502 were able to show amounts in excess of this sum, the general average being $20 per capita. How ill-prepared are they to begin life in a new country. How insignificant when compared with our per capita wealth. The total wealth of the United States is estimated to be $116,000,000,000, which divided among 80,000,000 of people gives $1,450 per capita. Also, 11,528 received aid at charity hospitals, and 11,265 were denied admission because of idiocy, lunacy, pauperism, crime, prostitution, and contagious diseases, and we can only by conjecture estimate the vast number of this class who escaped the vigilance of the officers and came into the country.

There is another thought that overshadows all of this. What will become of our children and their descendants if this flood of immigration into our country is allowed to continue? Our own increase is 14 per cent per decade, and with an annual influx of quite 2,000,000 how long will it be before all the evils of overcrowded Europe will be upon us? I dare say that many of those of your blood and my blood will be unable to get homes in fifty years, and in one hundred years, unless this inpouring of humanity is stopped, all the evils of overcrowded India will be our fate. To some this may appear to be mere speculation, but listen to what the highest immigration official of the Government has to say in this regard:

> What will be the effect if the present phenomenal immigration continues is a question that is being asked constantly. With regard more particularly to quantity, the question may be answered by the following illustration: China proper is the thickly populated portion of the Chinese Empire, and is the country popularly thought of as representing the limit of density of population. With a net increase to our population by an immigration of 1,000,000 per annum, which is less than the present rate, and the present rate of natural increase (14.66 per cent per decade), the United States would reach the density of China proper in about four generations, or, more particularly, in one hundred and thirty-four years, at which time we would have a population of 950,000,000. This is in no sense an estimate of future population; it is simply an illustration of the present pace.

Mr. Chairman, I believe I would be recreant to my party were I to miss this opportunity of showing the duplicity of my Republican friends in dealing with this great question. They have proclaimed their loyalty to the laboring man all over the continent; they have avowed their allegiance to protection in order to give the poor laboring man a compensating wage. Yet they are permitting these hordes to invade this country to compete for his humble job. No one ever heard of the financiers, lawyers, or doctors of Europe coming this way. Those who come are the poor, who earn their bread by manual labor, and their very first act after landing is to knock at the door of another laborer's job. In the light of this fact, how are you going to stand before the vast army of our outraged laborers, who, after laboring for years under your rule, are unable to finance a strike for thirty days? What are you going to say to the carpenters, shoemakers, miners, tailors, bricklayers, and engineers when you permitted thousands of this class to come into the United States in 1907 to compete for their now overcrowded positions?

Mr. Chairman, I want to approve every word uttered by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in reference to the protection of the American laborer—who is indeed and in truth the "salt of the earth." He has subdued the wilderness of a continent and planted it with the seeds of a superb civilization. Homes, farms, canals, railroads, cities, and States have been wrought by his labor, and why should he not be protected from this avalanche of foreign competition? Is there a Member in this House so abandoned to the instincts of humanity as to desire the debasement of our laborer? Give the man who drives the plowshare, who hammers the steel in the smoky workshop, and who clasps the throttle of the screaming engine an opportunity to provide a comfortable home and to educate his children in the ways of intelligence and God-fearing rectitude, and we will be invoking a benediction upon our country. The twin sisters of idleness and pauperism are anarchy and socialism. That nation that forgets the well-being of its toiling masses forgets its God, and its inevitable destiny will be a dwelling place in the archives of the dead nationalities. The sacrifice of humanity to wealth is an inscription upon the tombs of the dead republics.

Wholesale immigration into this country means cheap labor and, consequently, larger dividends to the trusts and great corporations. It may multiply the millions of the millionaires, but at the same time I would have you remember that it brings poverty to the home of the American laborer. Our chief consideration in legislation should be for the common people—the trusts and corporations are strong enough to care for their own welfare. Indeed, they have grown so powerful as to challenge the authority of the nation to control them.

But, returning to the question before the House, I want to say, in conclusion, that there should be a decided limitation placed upon the number of immigrants admitted into the United States. Our own increase is sufficient to settle our vast domain as rapidly as the well-being of the nation will permit. Let our first duty be to provide homes for our own children. Before many generations shall have passed our timber and minerals will be gone, and there will be no other means of support for our dense population except to till the soil. Then the broad acres now being appropriated by foreigners will be needed to sustain the life of our own blood. Our forefathers, when fighting our battles for liberty, never dreamed that this would become the dumping place for the outcast subjects of Europe; but they endured the horrors of poverty and war in order that their descendants might have homes of perpetual prosperity. Now, shall we surrender this legacy to a horde of outlawed foreigners? May God forbid.

This is the camp of the American Israel. May none but the sons of our own blood ever control the destinies of the nation, and may those who are to represent upon this floor generations yet to be born behold the happy homes of our descendants upon every hilltop from Maine to California. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On January 16, 1908:

H. R. 194. An act to authorize the county of St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across St. Francis River, at or near the town of Madison, in said county and State.

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Hernan Ulloa, of Costa Rica.

On January 20, 1908:

H. R. 9087. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903.

IMMIGRATION STATION, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is more than gratifying to a new Member offering his first bill to have the discussion attract the great orators in this House who enter into the philosophy, the economic, and national side of the question, but I beg to remind you, sir, and the House, that we have before us a bill for the construction of an immigration station in the city of Philadelphia [laughter], and unless there is some gentleman who desires further to be heard on the subject, I shall proceed to move that general debate be now closed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that motion is out of order, certainly until I can ask the gentleman a question. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there are eight hours and forty-five minutes of general debate still reserved. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not a lawyer, but I am an observer of the law, and I hope always to observe the orders of the Chair. Consequently I will ask that the debate proceed.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], as I understood him a while ago, stated that this building, which is there now and is being used as a station, was there in 1710 when his ancestors came over to this country. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether if the building has been there one hundred and ninety-eight years, and is in that condition, it absolutely needs to be taken care of to-day; if it can not wait six months or another year? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can only say to the gentleman from Illinois that we are a rapid people in Philadelphia [laughter], and while I would like to agree with him, I would not like to subscribe to the statement that this station has been standing there since 1710, when the forefathers of the gentleman from New York first arrived in this country and saw the light of day.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he or anybody else knows that $250,000 would be required for the construction of the building that is to be there erected?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are perfectly willing to leave that in the hands of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Supervising Architect of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Then why state $250,000 in the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that a substitute will be offered in a short time which I think will cover that matter.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman have any objection to striking out section 2 and then having an appropriation for the building after a thorough investigation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that that would have almost the same effect as referring the matter to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all, for you will have this bill passed for the construction of the building, and then the Committee on Appropriations can investigate and ascertain just how much money is needed to erect the kind of building that ought to be erected. In this way we could act on the matter intelligently, whereas now we are acting without any information at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois was probably not in the House when I made my original statement. It was, first, that the public generally complain of the the lack of facilities at this station. Second, it has been brought to the attention of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, who in successive annual reports has urged that a better station be erected and one entirely under the supervision of the Government of United States, which this station is not. Third, that the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor approved of the erection of the new station at this port. Fourth, that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has been upon the ground through some of its members, both Senatorial and Representative, and have by recent and personal knowledge of the situation made reports wholly in favor of this proposition. Fifth, that the members of the commission recently appointed by the President of the United States, and I think by the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House, have also visited the station, and in reports and interviews have condemned it as unfit for human habitation.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that everyone concedes the necessity of a building, but no one seems to know why it should cost $250,000. The gentleman who has charge of this bill does not pretend to say that he has any information upon which to base the cost of $250,000. The gentlemen who constitute the Committee on Immigration will not, I think, say that they believe $250,000 ought to be expended in the construction of this building.

Nobody seems to know how the sum of $250,000 was arrived at. All I ask is that the bill granting the authority to construct the building be passed, so that an opportunity may be given to the proper committee to investigate the amount of money that may be needed to accomplish the object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In answer to the gentleman, I desire to quote this section of the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907:

In Philadelphia also the service is handicapped by the lack of an immigrant station, to which particular reference was made in the report for 1906 (page 71). Every effort has been made to obtain proper accommodations without resorting to the expense of constructing a station, but without avail. The receipts at Philadelphia on account of head tax during the past three years amounted to $159,694, and the Bureau recommends that an appropriation of $250,000 be secured for use in the construction of a modern station at that port.

I desire to say that I have information that that estimate of the Commissioner-General of Immigration was based upon plans that were prepared at the instance of the commissioner of immigration at the port of Philadelphia, with a view of having the Pennsylvania Railroad construct a station, which the Pennsylvania Railroad up to this time has failed to do, and the estimated $250,000 is based upon the actual plans prepared at the instance of the Commissioner-General of Immigration in Philadelphia, who desires to take into account not only the landing stations, but the house of detention and all those other accessories which are essential to a building of this kind housing 34,000 people a year.

Mr. MADDEN. Does anybody know how much the land to be used for the erection of this building is to cost?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question of land is one to be determined by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MADDEN. How could they make plans to show the necessity for the expenditure of $250,000 if they didn't know how much the land was going to cost?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They made plans suitable to the present site, assuming that the city of Philadelphia, which now has the right under an act of assembly, might condemn that property and take it.

Mr. MADDEN. They would have had to pay for it, wouldn't they?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would they know how much it was going to cost before they commenced the condemnation proceedings?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a matter yet to be adjusted with the city authorities. I desire to say to the gentleman, and this partly by way of answer to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that always the matter of a site is a troublesome thing, that already the question has arisen, but it is the desire of those in charge of this measure to make an arrangement with the city of Philadelphia by which for a nominal consideration, if possible, a suitable site within the city limits may be obtained, in order that a building compatible with that great city and with the needs of the port may be erected upon it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman, in his time or mine——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, take mine.

Mr. MANN. I was not certain the gentleman had further time than he could spare.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has five minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I better hold on to that.

Mr. MANN. I wish to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois for one hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], figured a while ago on some amendments to the bill. I would like to have the gentleman send the bill as it is proposed to be amended to the Clerk's desk and have that read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, a suitable site and cause to be erected complete thereon a public building to temporarily accommodate and care for immigrants arriving at the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania; the cost of said site and the complete erection, equipment, and furnishing of said building not to exceed the sum of $250,000.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of ground for and the complete erection and furnishing of said building, which sum shall be paid from the immigrant fund.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, what is the number of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Seven thousand six hundred and ninety-four.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I heard language read at the Clerk's desk that I do not find here.

Mr. MANN. I was asking to have the bill read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, then, the difference is the amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield further? We have been on this bill, or, rather, the committee has, for about three or four hours. What is the matter with it? Why should we spend so much time on one building? I ask the question seriously.

Mr. MANN. Of course I understand it does not relate to anything in Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it does, because it is taking up the people's time, when I want to talk about the currency question and stop this panic if I can. I want to take up some of the time of this committee.

Mr. MANN. I want to suggest to the gentleman that right now is as good a time as there is to talk about the currency question. We are in Committee of the Whole and I will sit down in a very few minutes, and then the gentleman may be recognized and is entitled to an hour in his own right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I don't want to substitute myself for the gentleman. If the gentleman will discuss the banking question I will promise him that I will listen.

Mr. MANN. What I am seeking to do is to perfect legislation, having full confidence that the gentleman can cover the subject of banking in a way that will make me look silly if I try it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the Speaker of this House and Members of this House will give me my way I will stop it before very long and, I think, a good deal quicker than it is being stopped by the Wall street folks of this country, who seem to be trying to run everything. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is proceeding so well that I reserve the balance of my time, hoping he may be recognized.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is a surprise to me. Finally the Republican party in Congress has abandoned itself, together with the country, and turned both over to me. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, here we have been since about 12 o'clock on a $250,000 bill. Now let us be a little serious, if not with ourselves with the people on the outside of this Chamber, the great body of the American people. I do not know how much time we spent on a little measure here a day or two ago. I think it was to give two or three janitors to look after the new Office Building over here, and I was talking to one of the most watchful men in this House, a gentleman whose conversations I enjoy very much, indeed. We met in front of the bar—[laughter] of the House. I said to him, or he said to me [laughter] "How much time, how much of the public money has been spent here in these fifty-five minutes trying to settle on whether we are to have one or two janitors to attend to a lot of new work," that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] said was necessary to be attended to, and I believe my distinguished friend from Illinois said was absolutely necessary to be attended to——

Mr. MANN. I do not plead guilty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. At that time, Mr. Chairman, my mind ran not to the janitors, it ran not to the new work, for of that I have enough without running after more, but my mind turned, and with it my heart, to this, the panic-scourged people.

Here we were, this great law-making power, using that hour of time on a matter which could well be attended to by the Speaker or by Mr. Hinds, a very capable and honest man, a fine parliamentarian and splendid officer; here we took an hour of the people's time in the House to settle the janitors question, and how many hundreds of thousands of dollars it may cost for the American people I do not know. My distinguished friend, whom I met at the bar of the House, told me at one time that he worked out how much it costs an hour to run the American Congress, and the sum of money was almost incalculable when you take the number of hours we work and also the number of hours we do not work. He further said we had not been in actual session enough this Congress, up to that time, to make a day's time. That was since Congress reconvened.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to become a dyspeptic on the subject of the panic, nor do I want to become a chronic kicker about that or anything else; but let us see what the American Congress has done, laying aside this little immigration station here, or whatever it is Philadelphia wants; we might as well give it to her and proceed to work for all the people. Let us see, my friends, and I want you to understand what I am talking about, and I am saying it seriously, for I am talking to people outside as well. They are watching out; I tell you they are. The gentlemen in the press gallery, who come up here day after day "to see what the Republican party"—and I do not want to appear partisan—"is going to do to-day with the currency question;" they go away with feathers drooping and almost in disgust. "Nothing done." Now, Mr. Chairman, we have been here since the first Monday in December and this is the 20th of January, and what have you gentlemen done to cure your bad banking law, which you have been trying to cure for years before the panic? What on the panic question? The gentleman from New Jersey has been for four or six years trying to get the American people to adopt the Fowler bill, and I believe it was passed through the House by some sort of an arrangement, which I presume is recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it then went to the Senatorial graveyard, where its bones are not even decently interred.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it did.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman seriously say that the Fowler bill ever passed through the House?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it did.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman's memory is extremely good, and mine is not very good——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want always to be corrected by gentlemen who have a better memory than I have.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Banking and Currency to the House, but it did not pass.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What became of the Hill bill?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. It was not reported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So, gentlemen, we have had the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER], for years at the head of the Banking and Currency Committee, and by his side is that splendid legislator, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], each one complaining not only here, but at bankers' meetings—and they have been all over the country—talking about the fallacy of our banking system and talking about their remedies. You have been in power so long that I have almost no clear recollection about that, but the evils of your banking system still exist.

But, gentlemen, the people of this country are expecting immediate attention, and serious attention, to your banking system, regardless of the panic. Are you giving it? We see this buffer come in—the codification bill—after the holidays, instead of early in December, when we did nothing—no committees to act—and see this bill drag its long self through the House, and then you adjourned from Friday, through Saturday, and until Monday, and here you are to-day with a bill calling for a $250,000 appropriation, and taking up a whole day of the people's time, instead of turning the Members of Congress loose, whether you pass a bill or not, and let each and every Member of this Congress, if he chooses, as I have done on this occasion, rise in his place and discuss this great panic and currency question. I am satisfied that there are Members of Congress on the other side who will not discuss the question in a partisan way. I know that nine-tenths of the Members of Congress on this side will not discuss it in a partisan way, but will, as usual, discuss the matter from the standpoint of the American people and against the thieves and thugs that have robbed the people of this country in Wall street of their prosperity and their right to go to the banks and get all the money they have there. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the other day when I was on the floor talking about lobbying, talking about that creature that infests legislation, my good friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] interrupted me. But I am not complaining of that. I am always glad to listen to him. I am glad even to look at him. [Laughter and applause.] I am glad even to look at that little picture that he honored me with the other day, bearing his autograph, but not taken, however, in his usual position.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what discrimination is being practiced.

Mr. MADDEN. What was that; a promissory note?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; the gentleman does not use them. He is on the inside, and he does not have to give notes.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to know what the great Republican party did in the Fifty-fourth Congress when the Christmas holiday time came? Mr. Chairman, I want to know what the great Republican party did when it controlled the House and trouble was in the Treasury, and then I want to compare that era with what the Republican party did during these recent holidays that have just passed and gone into history when there was trouble with the people, but not in the Treasury. Mr. Cleveland was in the White House. I do not remember whether the Senate was Democratic or Republican. My friend from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] tells me it was Democratic. But at all events, Mr. Chairman, there was an empty Treasury, as the Republicans said in that debate.

The Democratic party had inherited a bankrupt Treasury from the Harrison Administration. I think that was admitted, and I have not recently heard any Republican dispute that proposition. The facts are set out in the last Democratic campaign book. What else? Why, Mr. Chairman, in December, 1895, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] was here, and possibly his colleague [Mr. CLARK]. What did the Republican party do then? Oh, instead of everybody adjourning and the American Congress going fishing like we did here a few days ago, why, on the morning of the 24th of December, 1895, as this RECORD shows, Mr. Dingley rose in his place here, as I have so often seen him do, and said:

I move when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The 26th day of December, the next day after Christmas; and when the 26th of December came, when everybody had enjoyed his turkey——

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And eggnogg.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And his eggnogg, whether he lived in Kentucky or not [laughter], why, Mr. Chairman, on the 26th of December, 1895, the Republican party, through David B. Henderson, reported a rule.

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order in the House to call up for debate, the previous question being considered as ordered, a bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, entitled "A bill to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government, and provide against a deficiency;" that at 5 o'clock, without delay or other motion, the vote shall be taken. General leave to print is hereby granted for ten days.

That rule was adopted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I turn over to page 309 of this RECORD and find the language of the late lamented Mr. Dingley, whose memory I greatly respect, and we find he begins his speech thus:

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, when there was read at the Clerk's desk on Saturday last a special message from the President of the United States informing that there existed a serious condition of the finances of the country and of the Federal Treasury, requiring immediate relief, and appealing to the Senate and House to take no recess until relief shall be afforded, every Member of this House, I take it, felt that there was imposed upon us a special responsibility—not only a special responsibility, but also that there existed an urgent demand for immediate relief on the highest patriotic grounds.

Then Mr. Dingley continued, then we had a speech from Mr. Crisp, and then we had a few interruptions by the present Speaker of the House [Mr. CANNON], and then Mr. Wheeler (Gen. Joseph A. Wheeler), made a speech; then here comes my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who made a speech of about a column. Then followed that bright, industrious, intellectual leader on the other side, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], with his great power of coercion that comes from long service, and erudition that enables him to succeed, with whip and lash, in driving measures along through the House. The bill passed the House at once. Mr. Chairman, when I stood in this House, seeing this same distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania bring in his resolution, a joint holiday resolution that came from the Senate, for this body to agree to, and asked that unanimous consent be given, that it be immediately considered, then, Mr. Chairman, I thought of this great party's record of industry Christmas week in 1895. I wondered why we should adjourn this House and all go home, a lot of us to the orange groves of Florida, a lot down to Georgia, a lot to New York, of course—every man permitted to go fishing with the scourged, but not the Treasury. Mr. Chairman, with an overflowing Treasury of the United States, meeting all the public demands, at a time the people of the United States, by a panic, are shut out from their hard earnings and deposits in the banks under Republican laws, and yet, Mr. Chairman, you adjourn without taking up the currency or panic question; without reporting the resolution which I introduced here on the first day of Congress, for the Speaker to appoint a committee of seven to investigate the cause of the panic in Wall street and elsewhere, without doing anything to meet this "emergency" of the people.

I say when I look at the recent conduct of the Republican party here in the Sixtieth Congress, and then look back to its patriotic record in the Fifty-fourth Congress, I stand amazed. The American people stand amazed, as does every man who has seriously and patriotically considered the great questions of the day, and particularly this one that reaches down to the fireside of every man in this land, whether he is poor or rich, black or white, old or young.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, I read in the New York Sun of Sunday, I believe, that it was in the air down here and somewhat in the air up there in New York, that a do-nothing programme had been agreed upon in Congress, that it was thick in the air that the American Congress was not going to do anything to relieve the people of this panic. Is it so? It looks mighty like it, and here is the bald-faced fact that you are spending the whole day on a little old building that you know you are going to build, on a little old bill that you know you are going to pass, and that you know ought to be passed, because the gentleman who has it in charge says that they have not enough light in that building up there in Philadelphia to examine the immigrants when they come in. Mr. Chairman, if the people in Philadelphia need more "light," or if the Surgeon-General needs more "light," and if the Republican party, with the assistance of the Democratic party on this side, can get more light on the subject, I am willing to vote for the bill, although I am not in favor of unrestricted immigration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Republican party is capable of legislating on this subject you ought to get at it. If the Republican party is not afraid of this "rich man's panic," it had better show that it has courage enough to grapple with this lion in its own lair and strangle it to death.

But instead of that, here we met on the second day of December, and now it is the 20th of January, and not a blessed currency bill has been reported to this House. Nothing done to undo this panic. Ah, some say you are waiting for the Aldrich bill. Is that true? Is Mr. Aldrich the American Congress? The Republican party may admit that he is their ruler, but I want them to understand that, by the eternal, Mr. Aldrich is not the ruler of the Democratic party nor of the patriotic American people. [Applause.] He may be the cofather-in-law and cograndfather of Mr. Rockefeller, and he may have in his pockets tobacco trust bonds and stocks, and he may run with some of these men in New York who say they are Democrats, "wolves in sheep's clothing," but I want the gentleman to understand, and those who are in alliance with him, that, by the eternal, there is one party that he can not run, and that there are a few of them left on this side that none of them can run. Ah, Mr. Chairman, has this House ceased to be a legislative body? Have we any rights as a House? If we have sense enough to legislate on the question, why does not the committee report a bill?

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the Committee on Banking and Currency have now before them a measure on which there will be public hearings next Wednesday, and they hope, in the near future, as one of the great committees of this House, to report a bill to this House for its consideration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why haven't they reported it before?

Mr. PRINCE. Because they have been busy working at that bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long have they been working on it?

Mr. PRINCE. Since the organization of this House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The committee was appointed the second day after Congress met.

Mr. PRINCE. The committee was appointed before the holidays.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long after Congress met—about the 6th of December?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; and before the other committees were appointed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And did you go to work at once?

Mr. PRINCE. They have been at work ever since. First, the subcommittee worked on the bill and then reported it to the full committee, and it is now under consideration by the full committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did you work during the holidays?

Mr. PRINCE. We did not, and very few others did.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many days' actual session has the committee held since it was appointed?

Mr. PRINCE. The subcommittee held a number of meetings. I can not tell you just how many.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman on that committee?

Mr. PRINCE. I am on that subcommittee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many days did that subcommittee sit before it reported the bill?

Mr. PRINCE. It sat a number of days. I can not tell the exact number.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three days?

Mr. PRINCE. Three or four days in the preparation of it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three or four days.

Mr. PRINCE. And then we reported the bill to the full committee, and they have had two meetings, and are to meet again next Wednesday for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many hours does the gentleman's subcommittee sit when in session?

Mr. PRINCE. I am not going to be categorically catechised by the gentleman from Tennessee, but I will say to the gentleman that the subcommittee have passed on a number of bills and been seeking to get a measure which will meet with the approval of the committee, the approval of the House, and the approval of the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the committee did not work during the holidays. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he worked during the holidays?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I certainly did.

Mr. PRINCE. On what committee?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was at home at work. I want to say to the gentleman that I begin work at 7 o'clock in the morning and as a rule quit at 12 o'clock at night. Does the gentleman from Illinois beat that?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not want the gentleman from Tennessee to explain what he does every hour of that time. I do not think it would be proper. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I can work day and night and be proper. I was at home at work. I wanted to stay here and offered to stay here, but I knew that in the mighty sea of Republicanism I would be a mere drop——

Mr. PRINCE. You are safe. You will be taken care of by us as you have in the past. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and no one has treated me more kindly than the gentleman from Illinois, and I would do anything to accommodate him; but what I want is for the gentleman and his party to join hands with us and consecrate themselves to the American people. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. I will say to the gentleman that we do not have to consecrate ourselves; we have been consecrated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But you have backslid.

Mr. PRINCE. No; the gentleman and his party have backslid.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Republican party——

Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to ask me any more questions?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly. I would really like to know—I know the gentleman himself is an industrious worker—how it is that you have been trying to granny a bill in here and have not got it in before this.

Mr. PRINCE. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not think there has been any "grannying" about the business.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not think so either.

Mr. PRINCE. We have been working assiduously to bring into this House a bill in good faith.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the gentleman has stated that so far the subcommittee has worked three days. I think the chairman of the committee [Mr. FOWLER] has worked more than that in making speeches outside of the House..

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman from New Jersey will be present when the committee meets. He is not shirking his duty; he is performing it faithfully as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if the report of the subcommittee was unanimous, or isn't the gentleman allowed to state that? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman from Tennessee knows that it is not proper to report the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What day did the subcommittee report that bill?

Mr. PRINCE. A few days ago we reported the bill, since the reconvening of Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, you had all of December to work on the bill, didn't you?

Mr. PRINCE. The subcommittee had December to work on the bill; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The full committee was appointed by the Speaker early in December. He was in a hurry to have the committee get to work, and rightfully so.

Mr. PRINCE. As far as men could work on a proposition of that importance that work has been performed. The gentleman from Tennessee must remember that the financial nerve is the most sensitive nerve that the Members of this House can deal with.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I don't want my friend to lose his nerve, but I want that committee to have nerve enough to bring in a bill.

Mr. PRINCE. The subcommittee has reported this bill and it has been printed, and that bill has been properly referred to the full Committee on Banking and Currency, and they have had two meetings on the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When?

Mr. PRINCE. Since the reconvening of the Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the committee meet every day?

Mr. PRINCE. The committee meets every Wednesday.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, every Wednesday. Why, I meet with my committees two or three times a week. I am on one of the hardest-working committees in Congress.

Mr. PRINCE. I wish to say to the gentleman that I am connected with a committee that meets two or three times a week, the Military Committee. I met there to-day, and we meet to-morrow and Thursday and Friday. I have more than one committee to attend to, and I must do my duty wherever it lies. We have had leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why didn't you do it?

Mr. PRINCE. We did.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Since you reported your bill?

Mr. PRINCE. Since the bill was before the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When did you report your bill to the committee?

Mr. PRINCE. The first of this Congress, after the adjournment. I can not give you the date.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Since you reported it a number of days ago, your committee has had the right and the leave of the House to sit every day, and how many times have you sat?

Mr. PRINCE. We have had two meetings.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And yet you have the right to sit every day.

Mr. PRINCE. And we are to have hearings upon the bill, and those hearings are to begin on Wednesday at half past 10. They are public hearings, to which the gentleman can come if he desires, or any other Member, and they are to go on continuously until we dispose of the hearings. Can you ask us to do more?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes. I think your committee should have been in session every day, and considered this matter every day, and if you would not let us talk about it here in the House, I think a lot of us could have slipped out and gone up there and helped you all to have your meetings every day. I will assure my friend that I will be one to go, and I can get a lot of others to do it.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman now knows that that is a captious statement.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the next witness be called. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just wait a minute, and I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, I am willing to be put upon the stand.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well. Here was the Republican party in the Fifty-fourth Congress that passed a bill——

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, does the gentleman say that that was a financial bill, passed under that rule? I was a Member of that Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Which is the more important, to relieve a bankrupt Treasury or to relieve a bankrupt people?

Mr. PRINCE. Was that a currency bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; but it involved currency, and it is harder to make——

Mr. PRINCE. Was there any currency legislation on the floor on the 26th of December, 1895?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This was to relieve a panic in the Treasury, was it not?

Mr. PRINCE. It may have been to relieve a condition of the Treasury; but I wish to say to the gentleman, as he has truthfully stated in his remarks, that the Treasury is overflowing, and there is over $240,000,000 in the Treasury to-day. There was no overflowing Treasury when the Ways and Means Committee met and passed that rule on December 26, 1895.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Which is more important, relieving the Treasury of the United States or relieving all the people of the United States?

Mr. PRINCE. I am trying to say to you that I think there was plenty of money and currency in the country at the time of this panic.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think so, too.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well. Then what could you do with a financial bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why didn't your committee come out here and say that you did not need any bill, if you are not going to pass any bill, instead of coming in here and blocking up the legislation by bringing in bills for the erection of an immigrant station at Philadelphia and this codification bill, both of which are unimportant as compared to the panic and currency?

Mr. PRINCE. I wish to say to you that the committee believes there should be a measure looking along the line of currency reform, that can be used if necessary long before the panic strikes the people, and not wait until after a panic comes to get relief, and we will bring in that kind of a measure; but I am frank to say to you that there is ample money and currency, in my judgment, in the country to do the legitimate business of this country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the majority of your committee think so?

Mr. PRINCE. I don't know whether they do or not. That does not change the situation—that there is need of remedial legislation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did the Government sell $150,000,000 of bonds?

Mr. PRINCE. They did not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They tried to.

Mr. PRINCE. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, well, the same thing, a certificate of indebtedness.

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, let us be exact in our statements.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the Government did not try to sell any bonds, and did not sell any?

Mr. PRINCE. The Government was authorized by law, which doubtless the gentleman voted for himself, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal, and that law was passed before he sought to do anything of that kind.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is plenty of money in the Treasury, and why did you sell the bonds?

Mr. PRINCE. Because he was authorized to do it, and I am frank to say he acted wisely if he saw fit in his discretion to do it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If there was plenty of money in the Treasury, which we both admit, why did we have to burden the American people with the sale of bonds to dig the ditch?

Mr. PRINCE. Because they needed the money, as they thought, in their judgment, to use it for that purpose, and the law authorized it. The law directed it to be done——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. PRINCE. If he saw fit rather than to take it out of the banks and sell bonds, that is a matter of discretion and judgment, if he saw fit to exercise it, and he exercised it wisely.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, if we had plenty of money in the Treasury, which we both admit, why was it necessary to sell anybody any bonds for any purpose, 3 per cent or any other per cent; why was it necessary?

Mr. PRINCE. There was a law authorizing it, and the Secretary of the Treasury saw fit to do it. That money was turned into the Treasury, and it was perfectly proper for him to do so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, let us get to the Fifty-fourth Congress. Is it easier to frame a tariff bill in twenty-five days than a currency bill?

Mr. PRINCE. Was that a general tariff bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It was a tariff bill reported by Mr. Dingley December, 1895.

Mr. PRINCE. Will you be kind enough to tell what that law was?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If anybody can tell what the Dingley tariff is. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman mean to say to the House and to the country that was the Dingley bill passed at that time?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; it was a bill reported to the House and prepared in the Fifty-fourth Congress by Mr. Dingley and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], but as to whether or not it was the general tariff or not I do not know, but I will read you the title. It reads thus:

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenues to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency—that is what he said. The RECORD so reads.

I will tell you what it did. It continued a whole lot of the Wilson tariff rates and raised others in that law.

Mr. PRINCE. It is not likely it did, because the Dingley law was not passed until after Mr. McKinley was elected President, and he immediately thereafter called a special session, and I recall it took months to prepare the Dingley bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It has been a long time, Mr. Chairman, since I read this debate, before I came to Congress and since. Here is the RECORD and debates on that bill; I leave it on my desk and I refer the gentleman to it, and it was passed in double-quick time; and that debate began December 26, 1895, in the House, etc. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if his Banking and Currency Committee have not been for years considering a banking and currency bill?

Mr. PRINCE. We have; some members of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, then, were they at any time for years considering a tariff bill?

Mr. PRINCE. I have been a Member of the House since the Fifty-fourth Congress. I remember when the Dinley bill was under consideration. We met, I think, about the 8th or 10th of March, 1897, and, as I now recall—I will not be exact in dates—it was in July, 1897, after our meeting in March, before the Dingley law was passed, and, as I am now informed by Mr. PAYNE, of New York, the committee began the work in the November preceding that March. Now, they began the consideration of the bill in November, 1896, after the election of Mr. McKinley.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, no; that will not do——

Mr. PRINCE. The committee could do that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This occurred December 26, 1895.

Mr. PRINCE. And on the 4th of March, 1897, Mr. McKinley was inaugurated President, and I was a Member of the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So was I; I am not talking about that bill.

Mr. PRINCE. And on the 8th or 10th of March we were called here in extraordinary session to consider the tariff question, and a committee was appointed by Mr. Reed, the Speaker. Only one committee was appointed, and that was the Committee on Ways and Means, and they proceeded and did not complete the consideration until——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was the first time I had the pleasure of meeting the gentleman, but I am not talking about that tariff, but the bill reported December, 1895.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman said a tariff bill passed in a month or two. The committee began the consideration of it in November, 1896, and it became a law and was passed in the month of July, 1897.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman state a few moments ago that the committee has been considering banking and currency bills in the committee for years?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; and we have reported bills to this House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And they died in the House. Now, what is the matter with the committee?

Mr. PRINCE. The committee has performed its functions. The House did not see fit to perform its functions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is, the committee is able to present a bill to this body that the party will not pass. His own party will not consider it. When the gentleman from New Jersey came in here to make his speech, he had enough blackboard to almost cover the Great Eastern ship, and he talked a long time, and I think the distinguished financier was the only one who did talk; that he is the only one who thinks enough of the Fowler bill to discuss it on the floor of the House, and the Republican party proceeds to turn its back upon it and defeat it. Then, why, I say, in all good faith to the American people, in times of panic, in time of need, did they put Mr. FOWLER back at the head of that committee?

Mr. KÜSTERMANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] during his remarks, which were listened to with deep interest, asked for information as to how much the expense of Congress was to the United States. I took the trouble to figure it out. It costs the United States $150 a minute, and thirty minutes would cost the United States $4,500. This is for the gentleman's information. [Great laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I dare say that while it may have cost $4,500 for me to talk, how much of the time has the gentleman sat here in silence when he could have spoken if he had chosen, and how much time has he permitted his own party to spend here to-day in putting up a little immigration office in Philadelphia? That is exactly the thing I am looking at. The gentleman professes to be a farmer. I will say that I was born and reared in the country, where I worked until I was 22 years of age, and I have shown more love for the farmers of this country in the thirty minutes that have cost them $4,500 than has the gentleman in the six weeks he has been here, because he has set in his seat and he and his party have done nothing for the farmer or any of the good people. Mr. Chairman, the American people are willing to foot these bills, and, by the eternal, if Uncle Sam gets tired of printing my remarks then I will print them myself, without any regard to Aldrich, or Rockefeller, or any other fellow, in this House or out of it.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES]?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the statement he made relative to the blackboards that were used by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] in the argument on the currency bill. In order that the history may be again set forth for public examination, that bill was one that was brought in here relative to the Government deposits in national banks, and when an amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] had been adopted by the solid vote of the Democrats and by the aid of many Republicans, and placed upon the bill, making the national banks pay interest for the $150,000,000 of the people's money, that bill, when it went to the Senate, was defeated there, and never became a law, for the reason that the national banks wanted to continue getting the people's money without paying interest, as they are now doing.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are opposed to it, and the House is squatting here like moral cowards and waiting for a bill to come over from the Senate that the national banks and the people, too, do not want. Gentlemen, are we a lot of children? Have we sense enough to legislate? Surely we have enough common sense, enough gray matter left to stand here in this House and ask for an opportunity to discuss the situation. Surely we do not want to spend from 12 o'clock until 3.15 o'clock, the time when I took the floor, or about that, to discuss my friend's immigration matter up here in Philadelphia, when the people of this country, Mr. Chairman, are demanding that Congress do something, not only to remedy the fundamental evil in the national banking system, but do something to relieve the situation arising as a result thereof.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell the House whether he has introduced a bill to relieve the financial conditions of the country?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have not.

Mr. PRINCE. Why does he not do his whole duty on that question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman's own bill stays in the committee and goes to a graveyard, I do not want to make any more graves.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman might be the one that would be the resurrectionist.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am going to resurrect something before I get through with this, Mr. Chairman. I introduced a bill here on the first day of the session asking that the Speaker appoint a committee to go to Wall street and elsewhere and find out the causes of this panic. And the Speaker has not appointed the committee, nor has anyone gone to Wall street as a committee. I presume Members have gone up there. They have a right to go up there if they choose. But the committee has ignored my resolution. Now, will the gentleman tell me the cause of the panic?

Now, the gentleman is on the subcommittee, and he is absolutely fair and square.

Mr. PRINCE. I might give you my views, but they might not coincide with yours. There are as many different views in regard to this as there are to any other subject.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want you to give yours; of course, I have mine, but I wanted yours, because I have known you eleven years.

Mr. PRINCE. No; I want to get your views.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If I do not agree with your views, I will tell you what mine are. But I asked you the question.

Mr. PRINCE. You have prepared this speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I did not. I do not get a chance to prepare anything. It is in me and comes out. [Great laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. As it is in you, let it come out. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the panic started, and I want Doctor PRINCE, who has been trying to deliver us a bill, to tell me what was it that caused your patient to get into this condition. Doctor BURTON will tell you that it is a sane rule in medicine to remove the cause and you cure the disease. Any fine doctor or surgeon will tell you that the very first thing to do is to find out the cause of the trouble; and a scientific doctor or surgeon will remove the cause before he can expect to get a cure. Then the doctor must be prepared before treating the patient to find out what is the matter with the patient, and I have been trying to find out from Doctor PRINCE what is the trouble with his patient before the committee. If I could not find out the cause of it, I certainly would suggest to call in additional surgeons.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has asked me if I had introduced a bill. I have not. I am not thoroughly versed in financial legislation. I have read on the subject, I desire to say, about as much these recent weeks as anybody; but what I have been undertaking to do is to seek to find out from Doctor PRINCE what his committee has been doing in the last six weeks to find a solution of the cause of this condition of things.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I desire to say the modest gentleman from Tennessee is the leading minority man of that great Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which has to deal with all these questions; and I desire to say he is the best-posted man on the subject on that side of the House, if not on both sides. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I will tell the gentleman if your Speaker will refer your bill to my committee and make me chairman, and let me pick out five or six other Democrats on this side and a few Republicans on that side, I will have you a bill here by Saturday night. [Laughter.] If you leave it to Doctor GAINES to treat, he will rout out these people who have run into ruin the banks of the country. But a gentleman has said, Have I introduced a bill? No, I have not. With the multitude of burdens imposed on me as representing one of the greatest districts of the United States, if not the most important of the whole Southwest because of its great institutions and great undertakings, that have taken up all my time and given me no time to consider a bill and very little for sleep and absolutely none for pleasure, except that of work. But, Mr. Chairman, what good would my bill do, if the Republicans won't report one of their own?

Let me submit another means to restore confidence, or aid at least.

We have from $65,000,000 to $75,000,000 locked up in the Treasury of the United States, appropriated over a year ago to build locks and dams and for other river and harbor improvements. I am told that the money is not all used. We appropriated so much that we could not use it. I do not know why. Thank God they are working on the river down in my district.

Now, gentlemen, let me suggest something that will help things along. Let a resolution or a law be passed, if necessary. I do not know whether the law now permits it, but you can pass it almost as quickly as a dove can fly from here to the Senate. Pass a resolution directing the President, the Secretary of War, and the Chief of Engineers to take that money and advance it to contractors; let the contractors give the Government gilt-edged security, and direct them to proceed to expend this money on our rivers and harbors that the people want improved. What will that do? That will put from $65,000,000 to $85,000,000 of money into the commercial arteries of the country, and at once. It will put back at work a million or more, possibly, of the idle laborers of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed until he concludes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may proceed until he has concluded his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. I shall try to be brief as I can. I tell you, gentlemen, I am willing to stay here day in and day out and do my duty in this matter, but do not divert me from my proposition. Mr. Chairman, what did England do when her people were clamoring for food to eat—when the idle people were breaking into the bakeries and into the stores to get food and raiment? England put them to digging up, not the bad streets, but the good streets in London and elsewhere, in order to put the people to work, to let them earn their daily bread, and put the money of the realm back into the financial arteries of the country. So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me if the great leaders, the men who run this Government, had been desirous of restoring confidence and of mollifying an outraged people, and particularly the laboring people, they could have improvised something along the lines that I have suggested. It is entirely practicable and feasible. It has been done; it can be done again.

Mr. Chairman, let us see something else. As I say to you, I am not an expert on currency. You bring this matter to the Coinage Committee and I will consider it. I will study it and I will not adjourn for a holiday. I will stay at work, if some of you die, too; you will not miss me and you will not miss the committee, but you will have the benefit of our work.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid, and I say it seriously, that the party in power is going too far with this thing of allowing national banks to issue money. Some of you are grasping now after centralized banks, and but for the example that Andrew Jackson set against it you know you would reach out after it and have a central bank, in all probability. Right on that point of centralization, let us see what the condition is. Here was one bank broke in New York, and another bank broke in New York—that is to say, they were robbed practically, and what occurred? All the banks in the country closed down, almost simultaneously. Did you ever see any more remarkable exhibition of centralized power than that? I submit candidly that no one ever did. The great bank that Andrew Jackson broke up was crushed because of its lobbying influences in Congress and because it undertook to lobby with him, undertook to run him, and undertook to run Congress. He crushed it for that, and because of its centralized power. But, gentlemen, I say to you seriously, where did you ever see any more centralized power than that those two banks in the city of New York should close up every bank in the United States? If I had told you that that would have occurred, or if the Speaker of this House had told you that, or if your own great President had told you that, you would not have believed it. Gentlemen, it is a serious matter. Instead of bringing in your buffers here you had better give Philadelphia this public building. I am ready to do it now. You see, gentlemen, that you are slumbering over an earthquake; you are slumbering over a volcano, and your whole financial system needs to be overhauled.

Again, when the civil war came on and the Treasury needed money, did we call on the national banks to furnish it for that great struggle or did the Government do it itself? The Government issued paper money and the Government's patriotism has made it good and paid it, and every greenback to-day is just as good as a gold dollar. Why do you not let the Government of the United States issue some more greenbacks, temporary at least? Why do you not allow the Government to issue the greenbacks and take our millions of deposits that are now deposited in the Treasury of the United States, combine the two, and lend the money to the national banks at, say, 1 per cent interest?

Mr. PRINCE. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PRINCE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he is in favor of fiat money?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman call greenbacks fiat?

Mr. PRINCE. Is it not a promise to pay?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask you if you consider a greenback fiat money?

Mr. PRINCE. What is there back of it except the credit of the Government?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Government is back of it, and the people of the United States are back of the Government. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that your party has been in power since Cleveland's time, and you have let two or three hundred and sixty-five millions of greenbacks remain in the hands of the people—fiat money, as you call it.

Mr. PRINCE. We stopped the further enlargement of the amount—limited it—and we have declared by law that we shall maintain our money on a parity with gold—put it on a gold basis—and that is the reason why the paper is good. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he is in favor of the temporary bridging over of the trouble by issuing an unlimited amount of greenbacks?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I didn't say an unlimited amount. I would say $150,000,000; make them redeemable in coin in one or two years, and then take the interest for the $150,000,000 in greenbacks and deposits we loan to the banks and go into the bullion market——

Mr. PRINCE. I wish the gentleman from Tennessee would answer the question whether he is in favor of relieving the temporary financial trouble by the issuing of $150,000,000 in greenbacks?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from Illinois in favor of clearing-house certificates being issued for money?

Mr. PRINCE. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That's what the banks have been doing all over the country.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman calls a greenback fiat money, I am for fiat money.

Mr. PRINCE. Is the gentleman in favor to-day of issuing $150,000,000 more of greenbacks?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am in favor of issuing $150,000,000 of temporary greenbacks, payable in coin in one or two years.

Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman speak for his side of the House?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No, sir; I speak for myself, John. [Laughter.] I am not the leader; the leader of the House is not here.

Mr. PRINCE. But the gentleman from Tennessee is standing in his place.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No, I am not; I am in my own place. [Laughter.] I had rather the Federal Government, that is not in the business of making money—investing for profit—should issue the $150,000,000 in greenbacks and let the people have it, than to have a lot of clearing-house certificates issued by national banks. The greenback is the better money. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would take the interest that would come from loaning the greenbacks and loaning the deposits and buy the gold bars and coin them into gold, pour them into the Treasury and redeem the greenbacks, and at the end of two years say: "Here is your gold dollar if you want it." And no one would want it. Then you will have your greenback on the outside and the gold money on the inside, and not a solitary man in the United States is taxed to pay for it.

Mr. PRINCE. Do you not at present represent the district where the great Andrew Jackson is buried?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, and John Bell, James K. Polk, Cave Johnson, Felix Grundy, Judge Howel E. Jackson, and Judge Cabron, and I expect to be buried there myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. Well, I hope not until quite a number of years have passed. He is your patron saint, is he not?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He certainly is.

Mr. PRINCE. Was he not a hard-money man all his life?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Absolutely solid.

Mr. PRINCE. What you call a hard-money man?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. Do you think he would have approved of the passage of the bill issuing $150,000,000——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He would have done his full duty, and promptly, too. We have issued paper money—the Government has—from time to time ever since we have been a government.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to know if Andrew Jackson would have recommended the issuing of money based on railroad and corporation bonds, thereby artificially stimulating the value of those things.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I don't know. We may this day be forced to do that. Here is an emergency.

Mr. SIMS. I thought perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] might furnish the answer.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is this about Jackson. We coined both the metals when he was President. We have issued Treasury certificates—the Government issued them, and not the banks, and have done so in war and peace. I do not mean to say to not let the banks issue some money, but haven't they issued about all they have the ability to safely issue? Let the Government issue some. I mean temporarily, at least. You say there is plenty of money. I think so, too, for honest business. Is there plenty of confidence? Of course not. The banks in my city of Nashville, every one, I want to say to my friends from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. KEIFER] who have done me the honor to come over here and listen—and I notice that the crowd is getting larger on this side as I proceed and smaller on that side [laughter]—Mr. Chairman, when I went into the bank to get some money to come up here, I asked them when they were going to open up. They said, "We are ready to open up now as soon as they open up in the big cities." I asked, "What cities," and they said, "St. Louis, Chicago, and New York, and St. Louis says New York," and Chicago says New York, and yet they don't open up in New York. New York seems to control the whole of the United States. It is centralization run mad. Wall street is running the country, punishing the people, producing a panic to stop Roosevelt from reforming wrongdoing in every avenue of the Federal Government—ordered the panic, I believe, to paralyze the arm of Roosevelt, who is enforcing the law against the Harrimans and against the lawless railroads in this country, and against the Standard Oil trust and the tobacco trust and the powder trust and the balance of these things that have risen up in this country under a high protective tariff that you will not repeal or modify and get rid of them. Ah, Mr. Chairman, you are trying to control something, these trusts have grown up, are "21 years old" and free, and yet you are letting the little ones come right along and they are going to be 21 years old before you are 60. Why don't you change your tariff that shelters them? Why don't you reduce your tariff and stop accumulating so many fortunes in the hands of a few? Putting so much wealth in a few hands has always been dangerous to a country. Why don't you make a tariff that will stop making multimillionaires and will put all the people in easy circumstances throughout this country? Mr. Chairman, when you have done that, levy an income tax and an inheritance tax and enforce the law, and you will do away with these immense trusts, these immense fortunes that tend to so much power in the hands of one or two men as to produce a panic, which I believe they have produced, to wit, the one the people are now suffering from.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To what extent has the protective tariff contributed to the building up of the tobacco trust?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I will tell you. Previous to 1893 the Republicans endeavored to levy a tax of 6 cents on leaf tobacco. I am glad to see so many of my distinguished friends who want to know something about the tobacco trust. That is not the only trust that I have studied and fought.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question here?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I simply want to suggest to the gentleman as to the desirability of going into new subjects in this connection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I won't.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will not be able to conclude his remarks to-night I would be glad to have him continue to-morrow if we go over and are in Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am ready to conclude.

Mr. MANN. I simply want to say that if the House should adjourn about 5 o'clock and the bill should come up for consideration under the five-minute rule, it will take a few minutes to amend the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well, I will be through in a minute. In 1893 they put a tax on leaf tobacco, when the buyer—not the grower who raised it—sold it to the consumer. In lieu of this leaf the trust thus forces the people to buy and use manufactured tobacco it makes or the people must go without, and storekeepers, too. Thus, you see, the retail seller—the store man—can not sell leaf any more to the consumer, because of this tax, and must sell the trust-made goods, or not sell. Repeal this tax and restore the storekeeper to his old business. Then he will buy the farmer's leaf and help the farmer. In other words, that tax puts it in the power of the tobacco trust to force every man to use manufactured tobacco, and that, too, made by the trust or at its prices, or he must go without any. Now, that answers the question to that extent. That tax law was put in the Wilson tariff act and was continued in the Dingley Act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was a Democratic tariff.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, and it was reenacted by the Dingley tariff. I told you the other day Duke worked one side of the House and Ryan worked the other side.

Mr. LANGLEY. We have a very burning question pending in our State——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Burning?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes, sir. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he has any well-defined, preconceived notions on the dog tax question; if he has, will he not give the House the benefit of them before he takes his seat. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman represents the happy land of "Canine" in the House, I will be very willing to discuss that question in my next speech. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no other member of the committee who seeks recognition——

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I only want a few minutes in which to correct a statement of my colleague from Louisiana [Mr. FAYROT], the statement being that one-third of the cotton crop has not yet been gathered. I wish to state my colleague represents a rich alluvial portion of the State on the Mississippi River, where enormous quantities of cotton are made and where there is a great scarcity of labor; that on that account in his immediate locality and that portion which he traverses going to and coming from the city of Washington, up and down the Mississippi, there is still a large quantity of cotton in the fields ungathered, but that statement does not apply to the entire State of Louisiana. In the northern portion of the State, in the Congressional District which I have the honor to represent, we have the boll weevil, and in that section of the State of Louisiana there is such devastation that early in the fall, before the usual crop season was half over, the entire crop of cotton had been gathered, and also that the crop in the State of Texas has been devastated by the ravages of this insect which is now making its progress onward into the State of Mississippi.

The condition which he speaks of being local, it would not be just to the cotton raisers of this country for the idea to be passed over the land that there was an enormous quantity of cotton to be harvested.

As for the question of immigration, I believe in restricted immigration.

As to the question of appropriations in large amount for the stations to provide for the comfort of immigrants, I think they should be scattered in the various portions of the country. It is only for the purpose of correcting this wrong impression which may have obtained on account of the statement of my colleague that I desire to make this correction. Of course, we all realize that there is no more beautiful, no more fertile, no more lovely section on the globe than the State of Louisiana:

LOUISIANA.

Land of the mocking bird, sunlight, and beauty;
Land where the willows bend over the stream;
Land where the odor of sweet-scented flowers
Enraptures the senses and nurtures a dream.

[Applause.]

Land where the ladies are fairer than Eden;
Land where the men are chivalric and brave;
Land where the hero lives over in story,
Whilst tears of affection drop over his grave.
Land of my boyhood, my manhood, my prime;
Land of my soul's love, land of my birth;
Let me sleep where the arm of the willow is waving
And gray-tinted mosses encircle the earth.

[Loud and continuous applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If no Member seeks recognition to use up the ten hours and fifty minutes remaining, the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected, on a site to be selected, a public building to temporarily accommodate and care for immigrants arriving at the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following substitute for the section that has just been read:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation a suitable site and cause to be erected complete thereon a public building to temporarily accommodate and care for immigrants arriving at the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, the cost of said site and the erection, equipment, and furnishing of said building not to exceed the sum of $250,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two for information. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has the Government already an immigration building in Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a building there for immigration purposes, but it does not belong to the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And the Government does not own any for that purpose there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not own a foothold of any kind in Philadelphia. It is there by courtesy of a railroad and a steamship company.

Mr. BURNETT. The Government does not own the ground there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It does not own the ground or building, and the offices of the Government are in the building by the courtesy of this company.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]?

Mr. HARRISON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON]?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I made some remarks this morning which might have been considered in opposition to the bill, and I want to ask the gentleman now if he will make clear what I tried to elicit then? Is it, or is it not, true that at the port of Philadelphia more than three times as many immigrants come in at normal times as come into the ports of Galveston, Charleston, or New Orleans?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is wholly true.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I was trying to find out this morning, and I did not understand the gentleman to make himself clear upon that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's idea of the situation is entirely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of ground for and the erection of said building, which sum shall be paid from the immigrant fund, said sum to include heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches of and to said building.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the section so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of ground for the complete erection and furnishing of said building, which sum shall be paid from the immigrant fund; that the said building shall be erected in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department and under the supervision of said Department."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, some criticism has been made by certain gentlemen who occupied the floor to-day in reference to the consumption of time upon this bill. It would seem that some gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House would claim that time was being occupied by the Republicans for ulterior purposes, and I think it is fair to call their attention to the fact that most of the time which has been occupied to-day has been occupied by gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House, and that the only one who has spoken on subjects entirely apart from the bill was the gentleman who most criticised the House for considering the subject, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], who consumed about an hour and a half in complaining to the House that it did not do business, talking upon a subject entirely irrelevant to the subject before the House, and consumed the first hour because of a right under the rules which could not be taken from him by the committee. I have no criticism to make of the gentleman, but gentlemen must understand that if they desire to expedite business when we are required to go into Committee of the Whole they will not expedite business by consuming large amounts of time in criticising the House for giving them the opportunity to consume time.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. Was not the extension of time at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. MANN. I am always willing to ask that time shall be given in extension to any gentleman of the House, and while the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] did not speak upon the subject before the House I have no criticism to make of him for it, because I think he enlightens any subject upon which he speaks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments, with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there obection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, was the negative vote put?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wanted to vote "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again put the question.

The question was again taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 79, noes 21.

So the committee determined to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7694, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 251. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved February 6, 1907;

H. R. 4891. An act to authorize the city of Burlington, Iowa, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River; and

H. R. 10519. An act to authorize the Nashville and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Cumberland River at or near Celina, Tenn.

THE PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the Fifty-eighth Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railway Company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 20, 1908.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 21, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CARTER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of the Presbyterian Church of Loudon, Tenn., v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7694) to provide for the purchase of ground for and the erection of a public building for an immigration station, on a site to be selected for said station, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Mayflower Mills, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and the petition of B. F. Jackson & Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., praying that no new legislation be enacted amending the present food and drug law until the present law has been given a fair trial, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of the Society of Architects of Boston, Mass., praying that the Park Commission's designs for the restoration of the Mall in the District of Columbia be adopted, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., praying for the creation of a nonpartisan tariff commission to make investigations and report such modifications in the tariff as may safely and properly be made in promoting the general welfare of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Turner, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer retired list in the War and Navy Departments for the surviving officers of the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of sundry textile and other manufacturers of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national forest reserve in the southern Appalachian and White Mountains, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the East Washington Citizens, Northeast Washington Citizens, and North Capitol and Eckington Citizens' associations of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the extension of the tracks of the Capital Traction Company from Seventh street NW., along Florida avenue to Eighth street NE., in the District of Columbia, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DEPEW presented resolutions adopted by the Merchants' Association of New York, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution in re forest reserves in the White and Appalachian Mountain ranges.

Whereas the preservation of forests is indispensable to the national welfare in order that a permanent timber supply may be had and that the water supply of rivers may be maintained and regulated; and

Whereas the effect of denuding mountain ranges of timber is to subject them to torrential action whereby the soil is washed away, the surface rendered barren, the future growth of forest trees prevented, and disastrous floods caused at certain seasons in the lower courses of the streams with great destruction of property in cities and towns and damage to farming lands in the river bottoms, while at other seasons stream flow is almost suspended and great damage inflicted upon manufacturing industries dependent upon water power and navigation; and

Whereas the unrestricted cutting of the forests upon the White and Appalachian Mountain ranges threatens those forests with complete destruction, whereby one of the most important sources of timber supply will likewise be destroyed, irreparable damage be inflicted upon vast manufacturing interests, particularly in the New England States, and the towns and cities in the drainage area of the Appalachian range be subjected to great harm from annually recurring floods of increasing volume: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the Merchants' Association of New York, That the welfare of the nation requires that the National Government provide as speedily as possible for the preservation of forests, especially in mountain regions, the regulation of timber cutting therefrom, and for the conservation of the water supply arising in such forests with a view of lessening floods and maintaining an equable stream flow for the promotion of agriculture and manufactures.

Resolved, That speedy action by the Congress of the United States is necessary to prevent the destruction of the forests of the White and Appalachian Mountain ranges and the evils incident to such destruction, and therefore that the Congress is earnestly requested to enact into law the measures now pending for creating forest reserves in the regions named with a view to preserving the forests thereof by restricting and regulating the cutting of timber and promoting new growths.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of Local Union No. 6, International Typographical Union of North America, of New York, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the session of the Presbyterian Church of Johnstown, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Dr. Benjamin Wilson, of Rochester, N. Y., praying that he be granted a pension of $30 per month, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 30.

Whereas it has been the policy of this country from the beginning to maintain a small Regular Army, and in times of war rely upon the patriotism of the people to rally as volunteers in defense of the national flag; and

Whereas it is a recognized fact that the civil war, 1861 to 1865, forms the most sanguinary chapter in the history of the world; that the Regular Army during that struggle was maintained at about 25,000 men, while the volunteers numbered more than 2,500,000 of officers and enlisted men; and

Whereas it is a recognized fact that the union of these States was preserved and the national authority maintained by the patriotism, fortitude, and valor of the volunteers, to whom this great united people, now enjoying the inestimable blessings of a preserved Union, owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring herein), That we request the Senators and Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress from the State of Illinois to aid in the prompt enactment of a law in effect creating a volunteer retired list upon which may be placed, with retired pay, upon application, the surviving volunteer officers of the Army, Navy, and marines of the United States who served with credit during the civil war; such survivors now constituting a small remnant of that body of gallant men who led the Union forces to final victory.

Resolved further, That in our opinion the precedents of Congressional legislation fully justify the enactment of this law, namely, the acts of 1828 and 1832, granting retired pay during life to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and marines of the Revolution; the act of 1901, retiring Charles A. Boutelle, a volunteer officer of the Union Navy with the rank and retired pay of captain of the Navy; the acts of 1904, 1906, and 1907, granting increased rank and retired pay to the officers of the Regular Army and Navy, based solely on the ground that they had "served with credit during the civil war," and the act of 1905 providing for the retirement of two officers of volunteers, namely, Generals Joseph R. Hawley and P. J. Osterhaus, with the rank and retired pay of brigadier-generals: Therefore, it is further

Resolved, That, in our opinion, the surviving officers of volunteers of the Army, Navy, and marines who served with credit in the great war for the preservation of the Union are entitled to receive from the National Government honors and emoluments equal to those which had heretofore been bestowed upon any officers who served in time of war in defense of the country.

Adopted by the senate November 26, 1907.
Concurred in by the house January 14, 1908.

Mr. HOPKINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to abrogate the rule and repeal the law requiring service of ninety days during the war of the rebellion in order to secure special pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 135) for the ascertainment, survey, marking, and permanent establishment of the boundary line between the State of Idaho and the State of Washington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INTERNATIONAL MINING EXPOSITION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am directed by the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2424) providing for a United States exhibit at the International Mining Exposition, Madison Square Garden, New York City, and inviting other nations to participate therein, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is there a written report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a written report accompanying it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 77, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

Your Committee on Industrial Expositions, having had under consideration Senate bill 2424, report the said bill favorably with the following amendments:

In the title strike out in lines 2 and 3 thereof the words "and inviting other nations to participate therein;" strike out the whole of the preamble, beginning with the word "Whereas" and ending with the word "therefore;" in line 4 strike out the words "and directed;" strike out the whole of the second section, so that the bill as amended will read:

"A bill providing for a United States exhibit at the International Mining Exposition, Madison Square Garden, New York City.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of the Geological Survey, is hereby authorized to prepare and place on exhibition at the International Mining Exposition, to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, May 25 to June 20, 1908, an exhibit of the mineral resources of the United States and its possessions and the methods of mining and extraction of metals."

The bill as amended leaves it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to make the exhibit described therein. The bill carries no appropriation.

The exposition referred to in the bill is one to be made by an incorporated company, called the "International Mining Exposition Company." The expositon is to be held at the Madison Square Garden, Madison Square, New York City, beginning on May 25 and ending June 20, 1908.

The American Mining Congress, at its session in El Paso, Tex., in 1905, passed a resolution indorsing the proposition. The governors of most of the metal-mining States have expressed their written approval of such an exposition, and preliminary steps have been taken to prepare mineral exhibits of the States' mineral resources. The legislature of the State of Utah has made an appropriation for this purpose and appointed a commission consisting of the governor and four others. It is believed that the recognition and encouragement by the General Government which will be given by this bill will tend to stimulate interest in the exposition. No large expenditure of money on the part of the Secretary of the Interior is contemplated. The committee is of the opinion that the exposition will be of benefit to the great and growing mining industry, and therefore recommends that the bill as amended do pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. My attention was directed to a statement in some part of the report that no appropriation follows the bill, and yet in another portion it is stated that no large amount of money would be expended by the Department of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the bill. I should like to know from the Senator from Utah if it is expected that the Government of the United States shall expend any money on this exposition?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As the report says, Mr. President, the bill itself carries no appropriation. The matter is left wholly to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to make such expenditures out of the general fund as he, upon investigation, may deem necessary and proper.

I will say to the Senator from Texas that if any expenditure at all is made I am sure it will not exceed from $5,000 to $10,000. The whole matter is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The bill does not carry any special appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. Is the bill up for consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read for the information of the Senate, the Senator from Utah having requested unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the Calendar.

C., and in any navy-yard or naval station in the United States on the 1st day of January, 1908, with the name, rank, and specific duty performed by such officer, and, when attached to any board in the Navy Department, the nature of his duty and the necessity for the same.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to send to the Senate a complete list of all line and staff officers of the Navy on duty in Washington, D. C., on the 1st day of July, 1905, giving the name, rank, and specific duty of each officer on said duty, and, if any such officer was attached to any board in the Navy Department, what particular duty was involved and the necessity for the same.

SHAWNEE TRAINING SCHOOL.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to advise the Senate of the United States as to the number and kind of each and every employee at the Shawnee Training School, at Shawnee, Okla., giving the sex of each employee and the compensation, together with total expenditure made for the said school during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, with a description of all the buildings at said school and how occupied January 1, 1908, giving the maximum attendance for 1907 of the Indians or other pupils of said school, giving the name of the tribe or band to which each of the several Indian pupils belong.

Second. And he is further directed to furnish the Senate with a statement as to the cost of the buildings now completed at said school, including any water, sewer, or lighting plant.

Third. And he is further directed to furnish the Senate the total number of enrolled Indians under the jurisdiction of the superintendent of the said school, giving the tribe, sex, age, and place of residence of each and every one of said Indians under said jurisdiction separately, said statement not to include any Indian who is not an actual bona fide resident within said jurisdiction and who was residing within the counties of Lincoln, Oklahoma, Cleveland, and Pottawatomie, in the State of Oklahoma, January 1, 1908.

Fourth. And the Secretary is further directed to advise the Senate as to the actual number of original allottees within said jurisdiction who are now citizens of the State of Oklahoma and were residing upon their allotments January 1, 1908, giving the number of each allotment so occupied and the name of the allottee.

Fifth. And he is further directed to advise the Senate of the number of the allotments that have been transferred and sold by the approval of the Department, giving the acreage thereof; the number of allottees to whom patents have been issued and the acreage covered by such patents; the number of allotments under the jurisdiction of said school that have not been conveyed, giving the acreage thereof, with the total acreage of all the allotments originally within said superintendency, except such allotments as have been canceled by the Secretary of the Interior and the Mexican Kickapoo allotments named in the act of March 3, 1905.

Sixth. And he is further directed to investigate and to advise whether or not Indians of any other tribe or tribes than the Shawnee Pottawatomie have been enrolled or permitted to attend the said Shawnee Training School during the school years of 1906–7, and, if so, the number and to what tribe they belong.

DECISIONS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to furnish the Senate with a list of and copies of such decisions as it has made upon or growing out of the construction of paragraph 4, section 1, of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906.

SURVEY OF COWLITZ RIVER.

Mr. PILES submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to extend the examination and survey of Cowlitz River, provided for in the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, up to the head of navigation at Toledo, Wash.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer a Senate resolution at this time. I understand that under the rules it goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, directed to speedily investigate and inquire into all of the circumstances connected with the issuance of a restraining order in the case of Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, plaintiff, v. John Mitchell and others, defendants, in the United States circuit court for the northern district of West Virginia, on October 24, 1907, and report to the Senate whether in said matter the Hon. Alston G. Dayton, judge of said court, has exceeded his jurisdiction or power in granting said restraining order, and to report to the Senate whether any additional legislation is necessary for the protection of the rights and privileges of workingmen; and if so, to report such legislation without delay.

And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution said committee or subcommittee is hereby authorized to sit at such times and places as may suit its convenience, to administer oaths and affirmations, take testimony, send for persons and papers, employ stenographers to report its hearings, and to have them printed, such hearings to be submitted by said committee to the Senate; and all necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. In order that the committee may have as much information preliminarily as possible in this matter, I ask that the bill of complaint in the case referred to in the resolution and the restraining order be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. HALE and Mr. SCOTT addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. There was so much confusion in the Chamber when the resolution was read that some of us were not able to gather what its object or purport is. I wish the Senator would have it read again.

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCOTT. That is the purpose for which I rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I got the impression from imperfectly hearing the resolution read that it created a new committee, upon whom would devolve the duty of carrying the resolution into effect. I see by the reading of it the second time it provides that the Committee on the Judiciary or any subcommittee of that committee may undertake the work laid out in the resolution.

I do not know, Mr. President, much about the facts in this case. I do not know what the ultimate object of the Senator from Texas is, whether he believes that an investigation would show such an intrusion by this judge beyond his legal and judicial duties as would subject him ultimately to the process of impeachment. Of course, if there has been a plain case of usurpation of judicial authority, the remedy is ultimately, if there is any remedy, impeachment.

The Senator is an old lawyer and a good lawyer. Unless the Senator has in view and knows enough about the facts to be certain that the Senate should undertake inquiry, I wish to say that I do not want to encourage the practice of this body interfering with the courts and suggesting, as the language of the resolution does, that in a given case a judge has exceeded his authority. The Senator will see that if the Senate embarks generally upon such a course in every complaint as to the effect of a judicial decision, we are setting ourselves afloat on a very wide and very deep sea, and any decision which creates public comment, that is not in accord with everybody's belief and is supposed to work hardship, may be taken notice of by the Senate passing a resolution for a special investigation.

Mr. President, I am old fashioned enough that I should not like to see the Federal judiciary of the country under the expectation or fear that in hewing to the line and in passing judgment and making decrees the Senate, at any time when any complaint should be made, would take up the matter and demand an investigation.

Now, I am willing to be reasonable in this matter. The Senator is a conservative Senator. He does not believe in keeping the courts under the harrow, notifying every judge that he is in danger if he does not make such and such a decision, that the Senate will call him to account. I do not think the Senator wants such a situation as that. I certainly do not. Knowing so little about the circumstances and the incidents of this decision, I simply leave it by appealing to the good sense of the Senator and his knowledge of the circumstances to let the resolution go over for a day, leaving it for the Senate to more fully consider it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I stated at the outset that the resolution would necessarily go to a committee, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but that in order that the committee might have as much information as practicable upon the subject, and the Senate as well, I asked that the bill of complaint and the restraining order of the judge might be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. HALE. I think that is a very good suggestion, and I think it is an additional reason why the whole matter should go over. While it is to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, that committee never takes cognizance of the subject merits of a resolution. The only consideration that it takes into account is whether the expense shall be allowed. I wish the Senator would let the resolution go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not ask that the Senate agree to the present consideration of the resolution, but I have suggested that the resolution will go, in the first instance, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and when that report is made, the question may arise here as to whether the resolution ought to pass, when we know the cost and the opinion of that committee.

I repeat, therefore, that the question is not now on the passage of the resolution. I have simply asked for the reference of the resolution to this intermediary committee, as I understand the rules make that necessary, and the printing of the complaint and the restraining order in this case as a Senate document.

Mr. President, so far as the remarks of the Senator from Maine are concerned, with reference to the purpose of the resolution, of course the Senate is not a grand jury, and the Senate is not organized in the first instance to hear charges preferred against a judge of a United States court or any other officer of the United States with a view to impeachment. Obviously, of course, under the Constitution and our theory of Government nothing of that kind is proper, and the resolution itself, by implication, clearly shows that there is no such purpose in view, for it provides that the Committee on the Judiciary shall report to the Senate whether "any additional legislation is necessary for the protection of the rights and the privileges of workingmen, and if so to report such legislation without delay." That is the only inquiry.

Now, while I have the floor, though I did not intend to do so, I want to call attention to the fact that this bill of complaint admits that there had been no physical violence employed in this instance. Then the judge in his restraining order, reciting the charges in the bill of complaint, says:

That the said defendants are conspiring together to unionize plaintiff's coal mine without plaintiff's consent and against plaintiff's will, and in so doing and in trying to effectuate said unlawful object the said defendants are about to cause a large number of plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, contrary to the terms of their employment by the plaintiff and in violation of their contract of service with plaintiff.

Then the judge proceeds in his restraining order that these defendants—be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with the employees of the plaintiff for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine without plaintiff's consent by representing or causing to be represented in express or implied terms, to any of plaintiff's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of plaintiff, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or entering the employment of plaintiff, assigning, representing, or causing to be represented in express or implied terms to such employee or employees that such loss or trouble will or may come by reason of plaintiff not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America or because plaintiff runs a nonunion mine.

Repeating, Mr. President, we have a bill of complaint, admitting that no physical violence had been used; we have the judge of this court attempting to restrain men from using their moral influence or making representations, express or implied, to other workmen about what might be their rights and what might be the result of any action on their part.

It occurs to me, in reading these papers, that this is an advanced doctrine upon the part of the court. I may be mistaken. I express no ultimate opinion about it; I do not want to go into the subject until we have had these papers printed and laid before the Senate for its consideration; but since the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has made the observations he has, I feel it proper to call attention to this restraining order, the terms of which go to the extent of enjoining men from even making an argument to their associates as to what might be the result on their part of taking certain action.

I ask that these papers be printed as a Senate document for the use of the committee to which this resolution will go.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have heard only the latter part of the Senator's remarks and may not have in mind what he has; but I will ask if this temporary restraining order has been made a permanent injunction?

Mr. CULBERSON. I am not advised about that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator, then, does not know whether the determination of the court has reached a stage from which an appeal will lie?

Mr. CULBERSON. Nor am I advised about that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator, who is an eminent lawyer, will see at once that if the suit had not reached a stage from which an appeal will lie then it has not proceeded to that point where the law of the country provides for a proper review by a proper constitutional body. If, on the other hand, it has reached the point from which an appeal will lie, the laws already provide and point out the proper course.

The question arose in my mind, when a court of appeals has been provided to determine whether a lower court has exceeded its jurisdiction, might it not be better to leave that question with the body created by the laws and by the Constitution for that very purpose than to attempt to deal with it in a legislative body? Indeed, how can we, a legislative body, discharge a purely judicial function?

Mr. CULBERSON. As I stated before——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. In a moment. As I stated before to the Senator from Indiana, I am not specially advised as to the present status of this case, but we have at this time the fact presented to us that a judge of a United States court has issued a temporary restraining order to the effect to which I have called attention. It does not matter, Mr. President—I think it is certainly not vital to this controversy—what has become of this matter; but it is important for the Senate to inquire whether or not such restraining order as that was allowable under the present state of the law, and, if allowable, whether additional legislation on the subject is necessary at this time to protect the rights of workingmen.

Mr. HALE. In view especially of the difficulty raised by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], I think the whole matter should go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to object to the printing of this bill and restraining order as a Senate document?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; I want it printed and the resolution to lie over.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is all I have asked to-day.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if there is, accompanying the document for the printing of which he asks, the written opinion of the judge who granted the order?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have never seen it. I have never seen any such opinion if it did accompany this order.

Mr. HOPKINS. If an opinion was rendered by the judge at the time the order was granted, I would suggest that the opinion be printed with the order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that if the Senator will furnish a copy of the opinion.

Mr. HALE. It will all go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Texas for the printing of the bill of complaint and restraining order referred to?

Mr. BACON. Before the resolution is printed—it is a minor matter of detail, but I think that if the matter be printed it should be in proper shape—I would suggest the elimination of the words "or subcommittee." The Senate does not deal with a subcommittee of a committee. The committee is the agency of the Senate; the subcommittee is the agency of the committee, though, of course, the question of a subcommittee is always in the discretion of the committee. Therefore, simply in the interest of orderly procedure, I suggest the elimination of the words, where they occur in the resolution, "or subcommittee."

Mr. CULBERSON. My recollection in regard to the procedure of the Senate is distinct that we frequently use the language of this resolution. As a matter of fact, I did not draw this resolution, although I examined it and made some changes in it; but my recollection is that it is often the case that the Senate authorizes a subcommittee to act. While I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], at this time I will not take advantage of it.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Texas if he is willing that the printing of this paper shall go over until we get the opinion of the judge upon the case, so that the whole matter may be printed together.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think that can be done later. What I desire is to have the papers we have printed, so that they will be before the Senate when the resolution comes up for consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the Senator if he is not willing to allow the matter to go over until we can get the opinion of the judge with it if it has been printed. I have no objection to the printing of the papers to which the Senator refers, but I think they ought to all be printed together.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is suggested to me by several Senators on this side of the Chamber to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia if he personally knows that there was an opinion delivered on this restraining order.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not personally informed, but I am pretty sure there was one.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator perhaps thinks there should have been one, in view of the extraordinary language.

Mr. SCOTT. I will endeavor to get in touch with Judge Dayton, inquire of him in regard to the matter, and, if there is such an opinion, have it here just as soon as possible.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, that the last remark of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] may not be taken as not objected to, I do not think that it is the custom of the Senate to authorize a subcommittee to report directly to the Senate. That novel idea has sprung up here within the last two years, but has not yet been consummated, nor do I think it probable that it will be. The proper procedure is that a subcommittee reports to the full committee and then the full committee reports to the Senate. As the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] properly says, the full committee is the agent of the Senate; the subcommittee the agent of the full committee. Only the committee which is the agent of the Senate reports to the Senate. If I am wrong about that, I should be glad to be informed, but if I am wrong—if unwarranted practice has been indulged in—then the Senate can not too promptly return to the regular and legitimate course of proceeding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] asks unanimous consent that the bill of complaint and the accompanying restraining order of the court referred to by him may be printed as a Senate document. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] asks that the opinion of the court, if one was delivered, be also printed.

Mr. HOPKINS. With the other papers.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not consent that the printing be deferred until the opinion of the court can reach Washington. The truth is I doubt whether there was any opinion delivered by the court. But I have no objection, Mr. President, none in the least, if the Senator from West Virginia can secure a copy to-day of such an opinion, to having it printed, and I have no objection to its being printed when it reaches Washington, if there is such an opinion.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I understand it to be the desire of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] that the opinion of the court, if one was rendered, be coupled in print and be a part of the document printed embracing the order made in the case. It seems to me that that request is entirely reasonable, because the resolution and the document finding their way into print here, of necessity there is some implication or reflection upon the action of the court. If the court rendered an opinion in the case, ordinary fair play and due regard for just treatment of the court requires that the opinion be not printed as a detached document, but as a part of the Senate document, where it can be considered a part of the record in the case to which it applies.

I understand the Senator from West Virginia to announce that he will endeavor to get into communication with the court, or the judge thereof, to-day by telegraph. That he can probably have a copy of the opinion here by to-morrow is apparent. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that the request for the printing of the document lie over until to-morrow, to the end that the Senator from West Virginia may communicate with the judge, procure a copy of the opinion, and have it ready to print with the document when printed. I think that is but a fair request.

I can understand, Mr. President, how this judge might suffer severely by the circulation of a document containing but a part of the record in the case, and I am sure no Senator desires to carry an impression that is partial and misleading concerning a court or the judge of any court. I do not feel like interposing an objection, Mr. President, but I appeal to the Senator from Texas to allow the matter to go over until to-morrow upon the promise of the Senator from West Virginia that he will get the opinion here for the printer to-morrow evening, if such opinion exists.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think, in view of the statement just made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] and what the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has said, that the whole matter of the printing and all should go over, and that whenever any document is adopted by the Senate as a Senate document it should contain all the record. Therefore I ask that the whole matter may go over, printing and all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 25,000 additional copies of the addresses delivered at the exercises commemorative of John Paul Jones at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., April 24, 1906, together with other papers and illustrations germane thereto, compiled and published under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; 8,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 17,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7694) to provide for the purchase of ground for and the erection of a public building for an immigration station, on a site to be selected for said station, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ROLLS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS, ETC.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, there was a resolution submitted by me on a previous day which went over under objection. I ask that it be now taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there is a resolution coming over which has precedence over that of the Senator from Georgia. The resolutions will be taken up in their order. The Secretary will state the first resolution coming over.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. CLAPP on January 20, 1908, directing the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the Senate a list of the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, etc.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CLAY on the 20th instant, as follows:

Whereas Congress has provided that the Postmaster-General shall require all railroads carrying the mails under contract to comply with the terms of the contract as to time of arrival and departure of mails and to impose and collect reasonable fines for delay when such delay is not caused by unavoidable accidents and conditions; and

Whereas complaint has been made that this provision of law has not been complied with: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

1. Does the Post-Office Department keep a record of the arrival and departure of mail trains, especially of mail trains delayed in violation of this act?

2. Does the Post-Office Department keep a record of the fines imposed and collected by reason of such delay?

3. If so, the Postmaster-General is directed to transmit to the Senate a complete transcript of such record, showing what fines have been imposed and collected and what mail trains have been delayed in violation of the provision of this law, especially a record which pertains to mail trains carrying the mails in and through Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, without reading, the letter which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks that the letter presented by him be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE CONSTITUTION,
Atlanta, Ga., January 11, 1908.

Hon. A. S. CLAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR STEVE: You will recall that you told me several months ago that at the present session of Congress you were going to do something in reference to the matter of delayed railroad schedules. The situation now is worse than ever and if we do not get relief I do not know what the newspapers will do, not speaking of mail matter generally.

For instance, Southern's No. 14 is due to leave here at 12.55 at night. We would like to send our papers that way to Macon, also to Savannah. This would give us a margin of four hours, with connection at Jesup to Savannah, and get our mail there at about 1 o'clock in the day.

We have tried it for a week and made connection at Jesup only twice, notwithstanding the four hours' margin for connection.

This train left here for Macon Thursday morning at 4.30, throwing out all connections and missing the morning R. F. D. routes. It left yesterday at 6.30.

Can't you do something to help this situation?

It looks to me that it is a matter of the utmost importance that the Government should require at least a reasonable observation of its schedule time in the carrying of its mail, and that if the service is not rendered it ought not to be paid for.

If the schedules are too short they should be lengthened, but the public should have a more reasonable assurance that the announced time tables will be observed.

Last summer the newspapers generally approved the stand you took, and they were all pleased at your assurance that you were going to take actively hold of this matter.

I am sure that if the administrative authorities of the Post-Office Department would take hold of this proposition vigorously on the basis of "no service no pay," it would result in some good, but it seems that it is impossible to obtain any relief from that source.

Can't you do something to help the situation?

With best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours, CLARK HOWELL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. STONE on the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to inquire, ascertain, and report to the Senate whether the moneys of the United States deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in depositaries have been distributed, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections as required by law, and if not, then to report, by bill or otherwise, what additional legislation is necessary to compel such equitable distribution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, for personal reasons I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow. At that time I will ask to have it laid before the Senate, as I want to say something about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3409) to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that the time within which all payments required by the acts entitled "An act to open to settlement 505,000 acres of land in Kiowa-Comanche and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory," approved June 5, 1906, and the act entitled "An act giving preference right to actual settlers on pasture reserve No. 3 to purchase land leased to them for agricultural purposes in Comanche County, Okla.," approved June 28, 1906, be extended for one year from the date on which such payments are now by law required to be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 300) providing for second homestead entries and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. NEWLANDS.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1424) to increase the efficiency of the medical department of the United States Army.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask that that bill go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Connecticut the bill will go over without prejudice.

FORESTRY SCHOOL IN NORTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 560) granting to the State of North Dakota 30,000 acres of land to aid in the maintenance of a school of forestry was announced as next in order.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from Montana will not insist upon his motion and disparage this measure by putting it under Rule IX. On a former occasion when this matter was being discussed, I asked that the bill be allowed to remain under Rule VIII without prejudice, and the Senate appeared to agree to that request. I do not see why the Senator from Montana desires to have the bill placed under a different rule.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, personally and on the Senator's account, I should like to see this bill passed for North Dakota; but the passing of this bill would reopen the whole proceeding of donating public lands in large blocks to aid divers and sundry institutions and purposes. I think the day has passed for making large donations of public lands, and, entertaining that idea, I undertook on a former occasion to oppose, and did oppose to the limit, the bill of the Senator from Wyoming proposing a donation of 50,000 acres of land to that State for a specified public purpose. If the Senator's bill passes, it follows that the Senators from every public-land State will be constantly importuned to procure donations of public lands for every kind of institution existing in their States. I am opposed to these donations on principle, and I shall certainly oppose this bill henceforth throughout the session.

I do not wish it to be pending under Rule VIII, for the reason that it requires the presence here at all times of some one of the Senators who may be opposed to it. Under Rule IX it would require a motion to take the bill up for consideration, while under Rule VIII it may be passed pro forma in the absence of objection. Rule IX is a wise one, and intended for just such cases as this.

I beg the Senator to at once dismiss the idea that there is any reflection upon his bill at all. I am opposed to it, and will speak to the Senate at length when it comes up for consideration. I am not averse to its consideration now on its merits, but I suggest that it will lead to considerable discussion and a general expression of opinion throughout the Chamber as to the propriety of continuing the system of making large grants of the public domain for such purposes as persons may consider worthy.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, just a word in reply to what the Senator from Montana has said. One would suppose from the tenor of the Senator's remarks that this was an entirely new and original proposition and that until this bill came in here no attempt had ever been made to secure a grant of land for any State for a purpose of this kind. Mr. President, it has been the policy of the Government almost from the beginning to make these special grants of land for educational purposes. I have not the record before me and do not know certainly, but I would not be surprised if the Senator from Montana, always alert in the interest of his own State, has already secured ample appropriations of this kind for his educational institutions. I would be surprised if he had not done so.

So, Mr. President, this is not a new proposition at all. It has been the practice of Congress for many years to grant these special donations of land for special purposes like this, and the Senator from Montana in objecting to the consideration of this bill simply because on a former occasion he objected to the consideration of a bill in which the Senator from Wyoming was interested does not afford a very sound excuse, it seems to me, for his continued opposition.

Mr. President, this is not a request for a large grant of land. It is a request for a grant of 30,000 acres to assist in building up a school of forestry in a State with 600,000 people and very few trees—a State with 74,000 square miles of territory and unlimited opportunities for development. The land to be taken is within the borders of that State. For obvious reasons we would not think of going over to Montana after the land. So, Mr. President, I think the Senator's objection to the consideration and passage of this bill is almost unreasonable, to say the least.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that if we are to give away lands in any State, North Dakota is the proper State in which to make the gift. It is an excellent State and is inhabited by excellent people, but the excellence of the State or the people does not touch at all the principle involved in this case. I have requested that the bill go over under Rule IX, because the principles involved, the extent to which grants have been made—imperial grants to new States—can not be outlined here under the five-minute rule of debate. I am at this moment, I understand, talking in violation of the rule, having once spoken on this question.

I ask that the bill go over under Rule IX, and I say to the Senator that if he will fix any day when discussion upon this subject will be agreeable to him, we will take up the bill and dispose of it on its merits without any needless delay.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Of course, I understand that the Senator's objections to this bill are such as to make it almost impossible to reach a proper consideration of it, and for that reason the continued opposition of the Senator will naturally force the bill under Rule IX. I shall be obliged, of course, to withdraw further objection to the Senator's request.

Mr. CARTER. If I may be indulged, I am perfectly willing to agree with the Senator, if the Senate is agreeable to the suggestion, upon a time for a vote on the bill, with the understanding that it may be discussed between this time and that at the pleasure of the Senate. I believe it is an important question. I do not wish to dispose of it lightly nor on a technical objection. I should like to know what the judgment of the Senate and Congress is with reference to the propriety of continuing indefinitely to make large grants of what remains of the public domain in the United States.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am willing that the bill shall come up now, if there is no objection, and be discussed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The pending bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

L. K. SCOTT.

The bill (S. 820) for the relief of L. K. Scott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to L. K. Scott $7,500 for royalty upon telescopic sights.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. BURNHAM on the 15th instant, which is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 820) for the relief of L. K. Scott, have given the same a careful consideration and beg leave to submit a report, with the recommendation that the bill pass without amendment.

Senate Report No. 2370, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, is adopted and made a part of this report, as follows:

The material facts upon which this claim is based are set forth in House Document No. 533, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session; Senate Document No. 31, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session; and in letters from the Secretary of War and the Acting Secretary of State, which are now in the possession of your committee.

In 1889 the War Department ordered from Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, of the royal engineers, through Lieutenant Crozier, the representative of the Ordnance Department in London, two Scott telescopic sights for trial. Colonel Scott was unwilling to sell a single sight to the Department without an assurance that in the event of its proving satisfactory the right of manufacture should be purchased or a further supply of sights be ordered to the value of about $100,000. Knowing the difficulties in the way of making any such arrangement, Lieutenant Crozier advised Colonel Scott to seek the protection of the United States patent laws, in order that he might sell a single sight without fear that it would be used as a pattern without proper compensation to him. This course was adopted, and having patented his system May 27, 1890, Colonel Scott furnished the Department with two sample sights, for which he received £79.

Subsequently, in 1894, a third sight, slightly modified, was procured. This was subjected to a careful test, as the two previous sights had been, and was found satisfactory. The War Department thereafter purchased 100 sights, for which Colonel Scott was paid £2,500, this price including the royalty of £10 per sight. Pending the delivery of these sights, in the spring of 1898 the Spanish-American war broke out and it was not practicable to obtain others abroad.

More sights, however, were urgently needed for the guns in place in the fortifications, and it was found necessary to manufacture them in the United States. On March 22, 1898, an order was placed with Warner & Swasey, of Cleveland, Ohio, for 125 Scott sights, this number being subsequently increased to 150. These 150 sights clearly embodied Colonel Scott's patent, though they differed slightly from sights previously furnished by him.

Colonel Scott's English patent expired November 18, 1895, having run the full term of fourteen years, and his American patent expired contemporaneously with it. No sights, therefore, were manufactured in the United States until after the expiration of the patent; and the War Department, in view of the urgent need for the sights, was justified in placing the order with Warner & Swasey, inasmuch as none of Colonel Scott's legal rights were thereby infringed.

Later Warner & Swasey manufactured 185 additional sights, involving still further modifications of the original model, and upon this pattern they have been granted letters patent.

It thus appears that the United States has adopted and made use of 250 Scott sights, embodying the English patent, and of 185 others modeled somewhat after the same patent—in all, 435 sights. Colonel Scott received royalties only upon the 100 sights made in England.

In view of the fact that he would never have parted with the original two sights, even after obtaining a patent for his invention, had he not anticipated a much larger sale or further payments in royalties; and in view of the fact that the sights were given an exceptionally long trial (six years) before the first order was placed, it seemed to your committee that Colonel Scott's contention that an argument should not be urged against the payment of royalty on the ground that his patent rights had lapsed is well taken, so far as relates to the 150 sights made under the first Warner & Swasey contract. As to the 185 sights subsequently manufactured there may rightly be some difference of opinion.

The War Department has endeavored to secure payment to Colonel Scott of the sum of $7,500 as royalty of $50 for each of the 150 sights first manufactured in the United States and such payment has been recommended by the Ordnance Department, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of State; but as Colonel Scott's claim was not founded upon a legal contract, payment from existing appropriations has been disapproved by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Colonel Scott acted throughout his transactions with the War Department in entire good faith. He has an equitable right to payment for the use of his invention, and the least amount which can be considered as due him is the $7,500 recommended by the Department as royalty upon the 150 sights manufactured in undoubted accordance with his patent.

Attention is called to the letter of the Secretary of War to the chairman of your committee, dated January 17, 1905, and to the other letters and indorsements hereunto attached.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, March 16, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith an estimate, amounting to $7,500, for compensation to L. K. Scott for his telescopic sights procured by this Department. Accompanying the estimate are the papers on which the estimate is based, the action of the War Department thereon, and the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury (to whom the matter was referred for authority to pay the claim from an existing appropriation), to the effect that if the proposed payment were predicated upon a legal contract, expressed or implied, he would be disposed to give it his approval, but in view of the facts he finds that resort in this case must be had to the legislative department of the Government. The whole correspondence tends to show that the inventor had reason to believe that he would eventually receive from this Government an order for a further supply of sights or a royalty for sights made in this country.

Very respectfully, A. R. BUFFINGTON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for the consideration of Congress, an estimate ($7,500) of appropriation required to pay L. K. Scott a royalty for telescopic sights furnished the War Department, and to request that the item may be included in the general deficiency bill.

Very respectfully, ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

---

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 22d instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay L. K. Scott a royalty for telescopic sights furnished the War Department, $7,500 for inclusion in the general deficiency bill.

Respectfully,
L. J. GAGE, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 11, 1903.

The PRESIDENT:

In connection with House Document No. 533, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, I have the honor to lay before the President a copy of a communication from the British ambassador with reference to a claim of Lieut. Col. L. K. Scott, C. B., late of the Royal Engineers, on account of the adoption by the United States Ordnance Department of a system of sighting of which he is the inventor.

The equitable right of Lieutenant-Colonel Scott to payment for the use of his invention is stated in a report made by the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army to the Secretary of War on May 11, 1903, a copy of which I also submit herewith.

I do not hesitate, therefore, to recommend that Congress be asked to provide for the payment of the claim in the amount stated by the Chief of Ordnance.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN HAY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 17, 1905.

SIR: I recommend the passage of the bill appropriating $7,500 to Col. L. K. Scott.

It appears to be the general custom in European countries for those who have invented devices in arms for which generally governments are the only customers not to furnish samples of their new devices, though patented, to any government except upon an agreement that the government will take a large amount of the arms.

Colonel Scott was induced to depart from this custom by the understanding that the Government, if the sample sights proved to be satisfactory, would take a large number within a short time. The Government did take 100 sights, which made a profit to Colonel Scott of about $5,000, but Secretary Root thought that he was entitled to anticipate a much larger sale than this. As a matter of fact, the patent which he took out to protect him expired before the Government used the sights.

Thereafter the Government did use a large number of the sights, some 250. Secretary Root thought it equitable to allow Colonel Scott $7,500 in addition to that which he had already received, and I concur in that recommendation. There is no legal obligation on the part of the Government; the moral obligation grows out of the fact that Colonel Scott was induced to part with two sample sights with the expectation, which then Lieutenant Crozier and Colonel Scott both had, that if the sights proved to be satisfactory the Government would at once purchase enough to equip all the guns in the artillery with them. The truth is that this is what ought to have been done, but through an unjustifiable delay of the officer charged with the duty the sights were not then purchased. When the Spanish war came on, it was necessary to manufacture them, and we were enabled to manufacture them quickly and promptly by reason of having obtained the sights from Colonel Scott, when if we had not obtained them we should have had to secure them, if at all, in some surreptitious way.

Very respectfully,
WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
United States Senate.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. CLAY. I think the report has been read far enough. It satisfies me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will suspend the reading of the report.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

B. JACKMAN.

The bill (S. 2580) for the relief of B. Jackman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to B. Jackman, agent of the Maine Central Railroad Company, Vanceboro, Me., $1,678.88, for refund of duties paid on condensed milk erroneously entered for consumption and shipped in transit through the United States to Dawson, Yukon Territory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC RIVER MEMORIAL BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1046) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be constructed a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property; the bridge not to cost more than $5,000,000. Five hundred thousand dollars is appropriated for the purpose of securing and determining on a proper plan and to commence the construction of the bridge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The bill (S. 24) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, line 7, after the word "for" to insert "a;" and in the same line, after the word "further," to strike out "periods" and insert "period," so as to read:

Unless reappointed for a further period of four years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 2, line 8, after the word "for," to insert "a;" and in the same line, after the word "further," to strike out "periods" and insert "period," so as to read:

Unless reappointed for a further period of four years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 4, line 24, before the word "April," to strike out "prior to" and insert "for ten years and until;" on page 5, line 1, before the word "grade," to strike out "next higher" and insert "highest," and after the word "grade" to insert "provided for in this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the captain now on the retired list who served as chief of the division of Revenue-Cutter Service for ten years and until April 1, 1905, shall have the rank and receive three-fourths of the duty pay and increase of the highest grade provided for in this act.

Mr. NELSON. I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words "April 1," in line 24, and insert "March 26."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. On page 5, line 6, at the beginning of section 8, I move to insert:

That the pay of the enlisted force of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be increased 20 per cent over the pay that they are now receiving.

That is the amendment prepared by Captain Ross, of the Service.

Mr. FRYE. Yes. It was agreed to by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. This seems to me a very important bill, and there are evidently some new features in it. I should like to have some member of the committee tell us something about the bill; whether it has had the careful examination of the committee, and so forth. It seems too important to me to be passed in rather a light Senate without any explanation whatever. I do not want to interfere with the bill, yet I should like to know something about it.

Mr. FRYE. At the last session of Congress a similar bill was before the Committee on Commerce, and was referred to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Mallory]. They spent a good deal of time over the bill, had hearings from day to day, and reported unanimously to the committee in favor of the bill. The committee gave it careful consideration and reported it unanimously to the Senate, too late, however, for action. It has been very strongly recommended by both Secretaries of the Treasury—the former Secretary and the present Secretary—as an absolute necessity for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

I have taken a good deal of interest in that Service, and I am entirely satisfied personally that it is necessary for the good of the Service that this bill should become a law. The additional cost, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates, I see, at only $70,000 a year, but since that estimate was made four officers have been required in addition on account of the revenue cutters we have built within the last two years. We are building revenue cutters every year now. There are twenty-one now in commission. We shall provide for two or three more during the present Congress, probably. That will add about $30,000 more. So the entire additional cost for all the improvements that will be made to the Service will not be over $100,000 a year. The committee understood the bill thoroughly, examined it carefully, and unanimously reported it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL AT SAN PEDRO, CAL.

The bill (S. 3660) to establish a light and fog signal on the outer end of the breakwater, San Pedro, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes their establishment at a cost not to exceed $36,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL AT PUNTA GORDA, CAL.

The bill (S. 3661) to establish a light and fog signal at or near Punta Gorda, in the State of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes their establishment, at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONTEREY AND PORT HARFORD, CAL.

The bill (S. 3153) to make Monterey and Port Harford, in the State of California, subports of entry, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee for information—not to interfere with the pending bill—how much expense is involved in making a subport of entry?

Mr. FRYE. Very little, indeed, from the fact that the duties at the various subports of entry are to be performed by officers already in the service and detailed for that purpose, to whom nothing additional is to be paid. I should not suppose it could involve a thousand dollars.

Mr. BURKETT. It is not a fee office?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. BURKETT. How much commerce is there at this place?

Mr. FRYE. That I do not know.

Mr. BURKETT. Has the committee any rule as to the amount?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps I can explain it to the satisfaction of the Senator from Nebraska by stating that Port Harford is about 250 miles from San Francisco, and Monterey about 100 miles from San Francisco. It is necessary that they be made subports of entry for the reason that large pipe lines for conveying oil from the interior of the State have recently been constructed in these two respective counties, about a hundred and fifty miles at Port Harford and an equal distance at Monterey. If these subports are not created, and if the collector of customs in San Francisco has not the privilege of entering and clearing vessels at these two stations, it will be necessary for a ship to come in ballast to San Francisco, 250 miles, and return again, for the purpose of entering and clearing the vessel. The expense, I will add to what has already been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is merely nominal. A deputy collector or an official in the custom-house at San Francisco will be detailed to perform this service, and the expense will be merely nominal. The ships that enter and clear must pay the regular fees as provided by law.

Mr. BURKETT. I am not opposing the bill, I will say to the Senator from California. I think it is a very proper bill. I was in one of those places last year and I saw the conditions which obtain, just as the Senator from California has suggested. My inquiry was to find out the expense, because there is not ample time to ascertain it when something of this sort comes up. I wished to know what was the expense at one of these subports. I have no objection to the bill. I think, as the Senator from California has stated, that there is a necessity for it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEA FOR MEDICINAL USES.

The bill (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, was announced as the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has any objection to the passage of this bill?

Mr. LODGE. I——

Mr. STONE. Pardon me just a moment. I wish to add that the bill has been considered by the Committee on Commerce, and already twice reported unanimously to the Senate after full consideration by the committee. As is seen by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury accompanying the report, he is of the opinion that the intent and purpose of the tea act can be fully safeguarded under the proposed amendment by proper departmental regulation, and he interposes no objection to the passage of the bill.

As I said, the bill had been reported previously by the committee, and it went over, under Rule IX, and failed of passage. It was discussed here on one occasion. In that discussion the Senator from Wisconsin at that time, Mr. Spooner, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] took part, and all of them afterwards stated to me that they had no objection to the passage of the bill after looking into it.

If the Senator from Massachusetts has a substantial objection, after having looked into it, to the passage of the bill, I should be glad to have him state it.

Mr. LODGE. I have great respect, of course, for the opinion of the Committee on Commerce, especially when it is unanimous, as it generally is, but at the same time I have my doubts about the wisdom of this bill. I do not feel that at this time, with the Calendar being read for unobjected measures, it would have what I should think proper consideration. I should like time to look into it and satisfy myself in regard to it.

As a general proposition, I do not see why an unwholesome article should be admitted to the manufacture of medicine which is excluded for other purposes. I do not say that my impression is irremovable, but I should like to look into the matter.

Mr. FRYE. The tea is unwholesome only for tea drinking.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I want to be informed upon.

Mr. FRYE. That is what it is.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may go over that I may have an opportunity to look at it further and read the report.

Mr. STONE. If my friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, will permit me to interpose here, I will say that in some minor way he took part, as I recall, in the previous discussion of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I remember the bill, though I do not remember discussing it.

Mr. STONE. The Senator has had now two and a half or three years to investigate it, and if there is some reason for insisting on his objection of course it is all right to let the bill go over, but if he has not I beg of him to permit the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. As I am at present informed I do object to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts adheres to his objection.

Mr. LODGE. As I think I see cause for doubting the wisdom of the bill.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator desire to have it go over under the other rule?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. FRYE. Without prejudice?

Mr. LODGE. I let it go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

ACCOUNTS OF WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

The bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. Is there a report connected with the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.

Mr. CARTER. Let the report be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. STONE on the 16th instant, which is as follows:

The claim of William R. Little is predicated upon facts that are set forth in a report made by the late Senator Platt of Connecticut on behalf of the Select Committee on Indian Tradership, presented to the Senate March 2, 1889. So much of said report as relates to the claim of Mr. Little is hereto appended, as follows:

William R. Little was a trader at the Sac and Fox Agency. He was licensed first in his own name, and then, his brother becoming interested with him, they were in 1884 licensed under the firm name of William R. Little & Co. The license expired on the 8th of September, 1885. Little was a young man, about 30 years of age, a native of Rock Island, who commenced life as a stock herder at $10 a month; afterwards became a clerk at the Pawnee Agency at $40 per month; was industrious and economical; and as a result of several years' services saved up from his wages about $1,750 with which, having obtained a license, he started a trader's store in 1882. He was successful in his trade, and had at the expiration of his license stock in trade to the value of about $3,800 and about $15,000 due him from the Indians for goods sold them. The annuities due to the Indians at that agency were payable semiannually, but had been delayed, so that no payments had been made for twelve months, which accounts for the large amount of debts due from the Indians.

In the month of August, prior to the expiration of the license, he made an application for the renewal thereof, but was notified that it would not be renewed. About the time of its expiration, H. L. McClung, of Knoxville, Tenn., and R. N. McClung, of Terrell, Tex., came to the agency and informed Little that they had a letter from A. B. Upshaw, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to the effect that they could have an exclusive license and right to trade at the agency. The letter was produced and read to Little. Thereupon Little made an arrangement with the McClung brothers to sell to them his goods and building and agreed to take charge of their business for them at $1,200 a year. The arrangement was that the McClung brothers would get him permission to continue the business until the 1st of January, when they would come and pay him the money for the same, reckoning the value of the goods at cost, with carriage added, and the building at cost.

Little, relying on the good faith of the McClung brothers, continued the business, his time being extended by the Commissioner.

While the McClungs were there making the arrangement with Little, Little received a letter from his sister in Bloomington, Ill., informing him that John Eddy, of Bloomington, had been licensed to take the place of Whistler, Pickett & Co., who were also old traders at the agency. Little showed the letter to one of the McClungs and told him there must be some mistake, as the letter which he had seen from Acting Commissioner Upshaw said that the McClung brothers were to have the exclusive trade at the agency. Little informed McClung that the Commissioner was coming to the agency that evening, and McClung waited and had an interview with the Commissioner, after which the two brothers saw Little, and one of them said:

"We have seen the general (Commissioner Atkins), and he says that John Eddy is licensed to trade here at Sac and Fox; that there is a mistake, and that he will at once, when he gets to Washington, send him either to Shawneetown or Wellston; that we have been promised the place and are going to have it."

He further said:

"Boys, you can rest assured that all is straight that we tell you."

The same evening one of the McClungs came to the store and said to Little:

"Now, you go on and order some more goods and keep your stock up until we come here, and we will take everything off your hands at cost and carriage, and we will be here on the 1st of January."

They went away the next morning, and Little afterwards received a letter from one of them saying that his brother had been to Washington to see the Commissioner. In the letter he wrote:

"Everything will be all right, Little, just continue as you are doing."

That was the last that Little heard from the McClungs.

They had represented that their father and the Commissioner were old schoolmates, and that the place had been promised them on account of the intimacy between their father and the Commissioner.

Two weeks after the McClungs were there, John Eddy came to the agency and said that he was licensed to trade there and wanted to make some arrangement with Little for his business. Little declined because he had made the bargain with the McClung brothers. While there Eddy made a proposition to Little to use his license under which to carry on the business and asked Little what he would be willing to pay for the use of the license. Little declined to make any arrangement. Little notified McClung that Eddy had been there. On the 1st of January, the time to which his license was extended, he closed the store. A payment to the Indians came on the 5th of January, but all that Little could collect of the $15,000 due him, his store having been closed, was $2,500.

Eddy had then made some arrangement with Whistler, Pickett & Co., or it was understood at the agency that he had done so, though it subsequently appeared that he put no money into the concern. Little went to Washington, told his story first to Mr. Upshaw, the Assistant Commissioner, from whom he got no consolation, and afterwards to Commissioner Atkins, who informed him that he could do nothing till he had heard from the McClung brothers. The Commissioner sent a telegram to one of them, and after about ten days received a letter from them confirming Little's statement, but declining to carry out the agreement which they had made with Little, presumably upon the ground that the license to them was not exclusive, and that Eddy claimed to have made an arrangement with Whistler, Pickett & Co. The Commissioner then told Little that he should have his license; that he saw he had been misled by the McClungs.

In the same conversation the Commissioner asked Little whether Eddy was then at the Sac and Fox Agency. Eddy had returned to Bloomington, Ill., staying at the agency but a few days. The interview between the Commissioner and Little and the statement made by Little about Eddy are detailed by Little, as follows:

"General Atkins got up and said, 'Little, I have a letter from the agent, a very nice letter, about you, and also one from the McClungs, and I see you have been misled by the McClungs.' He says, 'You shall have your license.' So I went then right down to General Upshaw and told him, and he said that he would issue the license, and went to looking over a bond that was dated back some time, and he said I would have to make a new bond. I told him I could do that. So I went right up to the Commissioner and told him I would have to make a new bond, and he says, 'You go right home, Little, and make a new bond and carry yourself like a man, and everything will be all right; and,' he says to me, 'look here,' he says, 'I just want to ask you a few questions.' He says, 'What about this man Eddy; is he down at Sac and Fox?' Said I, 'No, sir; he is not.' He says, 'Well, he has got a license to trade there.' Said I, 'I understand he has.' He says, 'Who is running the business there?' I said, 'The old parties, Whistler, Pickett & Co.' He says, 'Isn't Eddy there?' I replied, 'No, sir; he is not.' Said he, 'Where is he?' 'In Bloomington, Ill.,' I says. He says, 'Do you know that Whistler, Pickett & Co. are running the business?' I said, 'I think they were when I left. The old employees are still in the store, and there was no change made at all.' 'Well,' he says, 'if Eddy is not there attending to his business I will make him go there.' He says, 'Will you please put it in writing what you know about it?' I said I would. So I went right over to the office with Mr. Ellis, and I just told him what I knew about it, and he wrote it down and we went in and gave the statement to the Commissioner."

Little returned to the Sac and Fox Agency and soon after the agent there was notified to have Little close his business and leave the Territory, the reason given for the order being that Little had made a false statement as to Eddy not being at the agency. The store had been opened by Little upon his return, by authority of the Commissioner, telegraphed to the agent. The store was finally closed July 15, 1886, by an imperative order from the Commissioner sent to the agent, directing that Little should be put out of the Territory at once. The ground upon which Little's statement was claimed by the Commissioner to be false was that Mr. Upshaw, the Acting Commissioner, said that Mr. John H. Oberly, at whose request Mr. Eddy was appointed, claimed to be receiving letters from Eddy, dated at the agency. The matter was afterwards investigated at the Sac and Fox Agency, and it was found that Little's statement was true; but Little was not relicensed and no reparation was made. He was financially ruined by reason, in the first place, of having trusted to the McClung brothers, and, in the second place, for having told the truth to the Commissioner about Eddy when asked by the Commissioner.

If Eddy ever had any arrangement with Whistler, Pickett & Co., it was given up. He did not continue the business, and either resigned or his license was revoked. The agent was directed to put Little off the reservation, and Little thereupon sold his goods to the chief of the tribe, who had the right to trade without a license, at a nominal price and lost about $8,000 which were due him. He settled with his creditors for 33⅓ cents on the dollar. Through the intercession of friends he was permitted by Commissioner Atkins to go at the time of two subsequent payments to the Indians to see if he could collect what was due him, and has never since been allowed on the reservation. There were no charges whatever against Little as regards the conduct of his business.

Acts of this general nature have been passed by Congress at different times. It seems to be the only practicable way of doing speedy justice to Mr. Little.

The committee recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I observe that the report is quite lengthy and quite involved in details. I suggest that the Senator who made the report briefly explain the liability of the United States, if he will be pleased to do so?

Mr. STONE. There is no liability of the United States involved. The matter the Secretary was reading is from the report made by the late Senator Platt, of Connecticut, who looked very thoroughly into this case when he was chairman of a special committee sent to the Indian Territory to examine the claims of post traders and others there against the different Indian tribes. He reported that the claim of this man William R. Little was a very just one and that he ought to be paid.

The Committee on Indian Affairs had a bill similar to this one before it in the last Congress and reported it, and the bill passed the Senate, but failed to go through the House for lack of time. My remembrance is that it is was passed in the short session. It now comes again before the Senate.

The bill provides, as the Senator from Montana can see by reading it, that the Secretary of the Interior shall examine the accounts of the former post trader, Mr. Little, and ascertain the amounts that are due to him, if any, from individual Indians of the tribe, and to adjust them out of any fund in his hands, or that may come into his hands, belonging to the particular members of the tribe who may be indebted to this post trader, and not otherwise.

The Committee on Indian Affairs thought, as Senator Platt did, and as the special committee of which he was chairman thought, that as this post trader had been ejected from the Territory improperly, or that at least a very gross injustice had been done him by the means and the manner in which he was put out and deprived of his right there as a post trader, in consequence of which sums of money that he had put out in the form of credit to these Indians were lost, that he should have the accounts adjusted.

Mr. CARTER. The liability of the United States to secure or procure in any manner the payment of debts due from Indians to post traders brings up a question of rather far-reaching importance. I should like to have this particular case very clearly understood, because, if the bill is passed, as I have no doubt it will pass, it should be with such an understanding of the facts as will preclude the possibility of post traders all over the country sending to Senators and Representatives in the other House, claims to be urged and adjudicated through Congress, or the interposition of the Indian Office, merely to collect bills from Indians trusted formerly by the post traders.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2982.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like very much to have an executive session of about five minutes, probably not longer. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 43, as follows:

SEC. 84. Whoever, with intent that any person shall perform service or labor of any kind on board of any vessel engaged in trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or on board of any vessel of the United States engaged in navigating the high seas or any navigable water of the United States, shall procure or induce, or attempt to procure or induce, another, by force or threats or by representations which he knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person so procured or induced is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any such vessel, or to sign or in any wise enter into any agreement to go on board of any such vessel to perform service or labor thereon; or whoever shall knowingly detain on board of any such vessel any person so procured or induced to go on board thereof, or to enter into any agreement to go on board thereof, by any means herein defined; or whoever shall knowingly aid or abet in the doing of any of the things herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 85. It shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for, or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 86. [Whoever shall hunt, trap, capture, willfully disturb, or kill any bird of any kind whatever, or take the eggs of any such bird, on any lands of the United States which have been set apart or reserved as breeding grounds for birds by any law, proclamation, or Executive order, except under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, prescribe, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.]

122. Immunity from official proscription.
123. Giving money to officials for political purposes prohibited.
124. Penalty for violating provisions of four preceding sections.

SEC. 87. [Every officer, clerk, agent, or employee of the United States, and every person representing himself to be or assuming to act as such officer, clerk, agent, or employee, who, under color of his office, clerkship, agency, or employment, or under color of his pretended or assumed office, clerkship, agency, or employment, is guilty of extortion, and every person who shall attempt any act which if performed would make him guilty of extortion, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

SEC. 88. Whoever, being an officer, clerk, agent, employee, or other person charged with the payment of any appropriation made by Congress, shall pay to any clerk or other employee of the United States a sum less than that provided by law, and require such employee to receipt or give a voucher for an amount greater than that actually paid to and received by him, is guilty of embezzlement, and shall be fined in double the amount so withheld from any employee of the Government, and imprisoned not more than two years.

SEC. 89. [Whoever, being a disbursing officer of the United States, or a person acting as such, shall in any manner convert to his own use, or loan with or without interest, or deposit in any place or in any manner, except as authorized by law, any public money intrusted to him; or shall, for any purpose not prescribed by law, withdraw from the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer, or any authorized depositary, or transfer, or apply, any portion of the public money intrusted to him, shall be deemed guilty of an embezzlement of the money so converted, loaned, deposited, withdrawn, transferred, or applied, and shall be fined not more than the amount embezzled, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I dislike exceedingly to appear to be overparticular, but I thought that the Senators in charge of the bill had agreed that, without our calling attention to it, where a section was in brackets, they would voluntarily state to the Senate in what the changes consist.

Mr. HEYBURN. Until I noticed the absence of the Senator from his seat——

Mr. BACON. I have not been absent for a moment. I have been in the Chamber all the time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had conformed to that rule, but I had assumed——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not ask this simply for my benefit; I am only one in ninety-two; but I think it is due to the Senate that we should know the changes which are proposed. It is not for myself, individually. I have been in the Chamber during the whole time and noted the failure of the Senators to comply with the suggestion and agreement which was previously made; and I was reluctant to again call the Senator's attention to the matter, because I did not want it to appear that I was overparticular in that regard.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the Senator's attention to the statement on page 17 of the report of the committee accompanying the bill in regard to section 89, which is the section just read. It is stated in the report:

> Section 89: This section has been rewritten for the sake of clearness. The only change made is the addition of the words "or person acting as such," in the second line of the section.

Other than in the addition of these words, the section is existing law; but it is made up, as will appear from a casual reference to section 5488 of the Revised Statutes, of the substance of that law, which was not well expressed.

Mr. BACON. I understand, then, that this section was made up of several sections?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is made up of section 5488. It was necessary in the interest of clearness to somewhat transpose the language. I think the Senator will find that no possible change is made of the intent as expressed in the law.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 90. If the Treasurer of the United States or any assistant treasurer, or any public depositary, fails safely to keep all moneys deposited by any disbursing officer or disbursing agent, as well as all moneys deposited by any receiver, collector, or other person having money of the United States, he shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement of the moneys not so safely kept, and shall be fined in a sum equal to the amount of money so embezzled and imprisoned not more than ten years.

SEC. 91. [Every officer or other person charged by any act of Congress with the safe-keeping of the public moneys, who shall loan, use, or convert to his own use, or shall deposit in any bank or exchange for other funds, except as specially allowed by law, any portion of the public moneys intrusted to him for safe-keeping, shall be guilty of embezzlement of the money so loaned, used, converted, deposited, or exchanged, and shall be fined in a sum equal to the amount of money so embezzled and imprisoned not more than ten years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, section 91 is, in a measure, redrafted. If Senators will refer to section 5490 of the Revised Statutes, printed on the opposite page, it will be seen that it was necessary to rearrange the language of that statute. The description of the offense was stated in the negative in the act, which was passed in 1846, and in the interest of a concise statement of the nature of the offense it was found necessary to redraft the section.

Mr. BACON. I think the language as reported is very much superior to that which is found in the existing law.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 92. Every officer or agent of the United States who, having received public money which he is not authorized to retain as salary, pay, or emolument, fails to render his accounts for the same as provided by law shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and shall be fined in a sum equal to the amount of the money embezzled, and imprisoned not more than ten years.

SEC. 93. [Whoever, having money of the United States in his possession or under his control, shall fail to deposit it with the Treasurer, or some assistant treasurer, or some public depositary of the United States, when required so to do by the Secretary of the Treasury, or the head of any other proper department, or by the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement thereof, and shall be fined in a sum equal to the amount of money embezzled and imprisoned not more than ten years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, aside from the addition of the words "or under his control," in the second line of the section, the only other changes consist in the transposition of the language of the section in the interest of clearness.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 94. The provisions of the five preceding sections shall be construed to apply to all persons charged with the safe-keeping, transfer, or disbursement of the public money, whether such persons be indicted as receivers or depositaries of the same.

SEC. 95. Upon the trial of any indictment against any person for embezzling public money under any provision of the six preceding sections, it shall be sufficient evidence, for the purpose of showing a balance against such person, to produce a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury, as reqired in civil cases, under the provisions for the settlement of accounts between the United States and receivers of public money.

SEC. 96. The refusal of any person, whether in or out of office, charged with the safe-keeping, transfer, or disbursement of the public money to pay any draft, order, or warrant, drawn upon him by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, for any public money in his hands belonging to the United States, no matter in what capacity the same may have been received, or may be held, or to transfer or disburse any such money, promptly, upon the legal requirement of any authorized officer, shall be deemed, upon the trial of any indictment against such person for embezzlement, prima facie evidence of such embezzlement.

SEC. 97. If any officer charged with the disbursement of the public moneys accepts, receives, or transmits to the Treasury Department to be allowed in his favor any receipt or voucher from a creditor of the United States without having paid to such creditor in such funds as the officer received for disbursement, or in such funds as he may be authorized by law to take in exchange, the full amount specified in such receipt or voucher, every such act is an act of conversion by such officer to his own use of the amount specified in such receipt or voucher.

SEC. 98. Every banker, broker, or other person not an authorized depositary of public moneys, who shall knowingly receive from any disbursing officer, or collector of internal revenue, or other agent of the United States, any public money on deposit, or by way of loan or accommodation, with or without interest, or otherwise than in payment of a debt against the United States, or shall use, transfer, convert, appropriate, or apply any portion of the public money for any purpose not prescribed by law; and every president, cashier, teller, director, or other officer of any bank or banking association who shall violate any provision of this section is guilty of embezzlement of the public money so deposited, loaned, transferred, used, converted, appropriated, or applied, and shall be fined not more than the amount embezzled, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is proper to say, under the suggestion which has been made, that a penalty provided in another section was designated in section 5497 of the Revised Statutes. The only change in the section is that instead of referring to another section of the law to determine the penalty that penalty has been carried into this section.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 99. Any officer connected with, or employed in, the Internal-Revenue Service of the United States, and any assistant of such officer, who shall embezzle or wrongfully convert to his own use any money or other property of the United States, and any officer of the United States, or any assistant of such officer, who shall embezzle or wrongfully convert to his own use any money or property which may have come into his possession or under his control in the execution of such office or employment, or under color or claim of authority as such officer or assistant, whether the same shall be the money or property of the United States or of some other person or party, shall, where the offense is not otherwise punishable by some statute of the United States, be fined not more than the value of the money and property thus embezzled or converted, or be imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 100. Whoever, being an officer of the United States, shall knowingly contract for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement, to pay a larger amount than the specific sum appropriated for such purpose, shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than two years.

SEC. 101. Whoever, being a clerk or other officer of a court of the United States, shall fail forthwith to deposit any money belonging in the registry of the court, or hereafter paid into court or received by the officers thereof, with the Treasurer, assistant treasurer, or a designated depositary of the United States, in the name and to the credit of such court, or shall retain or convert to his own use or to the use of another any such money, is guilty of embezzlement, and shall be fined not more than the amount embezzled, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; but nothing herein shall be held to prevent the delivery of any such money upon security, according to agreement of parties, under the direction of the court.

SEC. 102. [Whoever shall knowingly receive, from a clerk or other officer of a court of the United States, as a deposit, loan, or otherwise, any money belonging in the registry of such court, is guilty of embezzlement, and shall be punished as prescribed in the preceding section.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 102, aside from the transposition of its language, contains no change from the existing law.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 103. Every officer who neglects or refuses to make any return or report which he is required to make at stated times by any act of Congress or regulation of the Department of the Treasury, other than his accounts, within the time prescribed by such act or regulation, shall be fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 104. Whoever, being an officer, agent, or employee of the Government of the United States shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in violating any provision of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail, obscene or indecent publications, or representations, or means for preventing conception or producing abortion, or other article of indecent or immoral use or tendency, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 105. [Whoever, being an officer of the United States concerned in the collection or the disbursement of the revenues thereof, shall carry on any trade or business in the funds or debts of the United States, or of any State, or in any public property of either, shall be fined $3,000 and be removed from office, and thereafter be incapable of holding any office under the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, section 105 is a composite of sections 1788 and 1789 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, molded together in appropriate language and carries both sections into one.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 106. [Whoever, being a judge, clerk, or deputy clerk of any court of the United States, or of any territory thereof, or a United States district attorney, assistant attorney, marshal, deputy marshal, commissioner, or other person holding any office or employment, or position of trust or profit under the Government of the United States shall, either directly or indirectly, purchase at less than the full face value thereof, any claim against the United States for the fee, mileage, or expenses of any witness, juror, deputy marshal, or any other officer of the court whatsoever, shall be fined not more than $1,000.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, section 106 is really a transposition of the language contained in the act of February 25, 1897. The change was made merely in the interest of a clearer expression of the intent of the law; its spirit is retained.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading, omitting the italicized sections which follow, if that is the intention of the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will just mention, so that it will appear in the RECORD, that sections 107 and 108 should be passed over in accordance with the understanding that sections entirely in italics would be passed over for consideration after we have disposed of the other sections.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 109. Every inspector of steamboats who, upon any pretense, receives any fee or reward for his services, except what is allowed to him by law, shall forfeit his office, and be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 110. Every pension agent, or other person employed or appointed by him, who takes, receives, or demands any fee or reward from any pensioner for any service in connection with the payment of his pension, shall be fined not more than $500.

SEC. 111. Whoever, being an officer of the United States, or a person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under, or in connection with, any Executive Department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, shall act as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States, or in any manner, or by any means, otherwise than in discharge of his proper official duties, shall aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim, or receive any gratuity, or any share of or interest in any claim, from any claimant against the United States, with intent to aid or assist, or in consideration of having aided or assisted, in the prosecution of such claim, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 112. [Whoever, being elected a Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, shall, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, directly or indirectly, ask, accept, receive, or agree to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value to him or to any person designated by him, for his attention to, or services, or with the intent to have his action, vote, or decision influenced, on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding, which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress or before any committee thereof, or which by law or under the Constitution may be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place as such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than three times the amount asked, accepted, or received, and imprisoned not more than three years; and shall, moreover, forfeit his office or place, and thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I see that section 112 is in brackets. Will the Senator in charge of the measure explain the changes? I do not ask for an elaborate explanation, but I will indicate my inquiry by suggesting to the Senator that he probably recalls a case that happened a few years ago——

Mr. HEYBURN. If I might interrupt the Senator, Mr. President, I would say that I was just about to ask that this section be passed over until some Senators who desire to be present when it is reached, and for whom I have sent, come to the Chamber. I would ask that the section be passed over temporarily for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 113. [Whoever shall promise, offer, or give, or cause to be promised, offered, or given, any money or other thing of value, or shall make or tender any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, to any Member of either House of Congress, or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, with intent to influence his action, vote, or decision, on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress, or before any committee thereof, or which by law or under the Constitution may be brought before him in his official capacity or in his place as such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so promised, offered, given, made, or tendered, and imprisoned not more than three years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in justice to the absent Senators who desire to be present when this class of amendments is under consideration, I think that we should pass over sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117.

I would say to Senators that the Commission report an enlargement of existing law by inserting a provision common to all these sections, namely, the words "after his election," covering the period between his election and the time of his qualifying as a Senator or Representative. Some Senators desire to inquire as to the wisdom of the amendment. Your committee, in considering the work of the Commission, carried forward a part of their recommendations in the nature of an amendment, which is printed in italics in each of these sections, and in order that there may be a larger attendance when a matter that so particularly and closely pertains to the duties and responsibilities of the members of this body is taken up, I think those sections should be passed over. They deal with the prohibition against acts of Members of Congress. The Commission has enlarged existing law and the committee has reported the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before that action is taken, I suggested to the Senator a while ago—though, of course, the suggestion was indefinite—whether or not this change covers the case that was presented in the Middle West as to a former member of this body, which decision went off on the proposition that, although he had been elected a Senator, he had not qualified by taking the oath of office.

Mr. HEYBURN. This does cover the question that was involved in that case. As I have said, the amendment suggested covers the period between the election and the qualification of a Member of Congress, and is an enlargement of the offense to that extent.

Mr. CULBERSON. Without being more specific, the Senator understands my reference.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I understand the Senator's reference, and it is a question that should be considered by the Senate when there is a fuller attendance than there is at this time.

Mr. BACON. What is the last section that the Senator includes in the sections to be passed over?

Mr. HEYBURN. Up to section 118.

Mr. BACON. Had not the Senator better include section 118 also, as that section refers to the preceding sections that have been passed over?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; let section 118 be included in the sections passed over, and we may then proceed to 119.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 119. [Whoever, being an officer of the United States, or a person acting for or on behalf of the United States, in any official capacity, under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government thereof; or whoever, being an officer or person acting for or on behalf of either House of Congress, or of any committee of either House, or of both Houses thereof, shall ask, accept, or receive, any money, or any contract, promise, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, with intent to have his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may at any time be pending, or which may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, influenced thereby, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so asked, accepted, or received, and imprisoned not more than three years; and shall, moreover, forfeit his office or place and thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in that section the change consists in carrying forward into the section the penalty that under existing law was prescribed by reference to another section—combining two sections of the Revised Statutes, namely, sections 5501 and 5502.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 120. [No Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress, or Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner elect, or officer or employee of either House of Congress, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employee of any department, branch, or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military or naval service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employee of the United States, or any department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in that section the only change in existing law is the addition of the words "or Resident Commissioner," an office that has been created since the passage of the act of 1883.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the learned Senator whether the committee, in examining the laws with a view to revision, took into consideration at any time—not especially this particular time—whether or not the law was a dead letter or had fallen into the disrepute of not being recognized by those for whose guidance it was originally enacted?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the committee did not enter into that field of consideration at all in determining the advisability of reporting existing law. There being other tribunals of the Government that are specially invested with the power and duty of seeing to the enforcement of the law, the committee were quite content to deal with the law as it is.

Mr. BACON. I fully understand and appreciate the attitude of the committee in that regard. At the same time the committee, while they were especially charged with the duty of revising the laws in order to make corrections as to style, perspicuity, and conciseness, have recognized that in extreme cases they would go a little beyond, and have, in some instances, suggested the enactment of new provisions of law. Upon the same basis of reasoning, I think, they possibly might have suggested whenever, by reason of a lapse of time or changed conditions, it was found that a law was not regarded as binding that it was better that there should not be a statute upon the books which was disregarded.

I am led to make that suggestion—and I will, by way of parenthesis, say that I think the position of the committee is eminently proper, being conservative and not going to the extent of attempting to repeal the law ordinarily—I am led to make that suggestion by the undenied publications which, in every political campaign, are found in the public press to the effect that there is a most flagrant disregard of the provisions of this law by the several Departments of this Government.

Now, Mr. President, I am not in a position to make good, by way of proof, what I say, because I did not anticipate that there would be occasion for my having here any newspaper clippings or anything of the kind. But I believe it will be recollected, as well as recognized, by every Senator that during political campaigns the newspaper press gives accounts of the fact that by indirection the law is violated and that those who are in the public offices in this city and elsewhere in the service of the Government, while not directly commanded to contribute to political campaigns, are under a duress which is not less peremptory and influential than a direct command, under which these contributions are taken up; and it goes without saying—as the dominant party is the one which has control of the patronage, and the offices of the country are, to a large extent, if not almost entirely, outside of the control of the civil-service rules, filled with the adherents of the dominant party—that those contributions are in the interest of the dominant party.

Of course I do not endeavor in this way to stir up any political debate or to impede the smooth and orderly current of legislation which we are pursuing in the enactment of this very important body of laws, but while we are laying down law for the government of the citizen and prescribing grave and hard penalties for the infraction of the law, I think it is not an improper thing to bring to the attention of the Senate that at the same time those whose duty it is to enforce law are very frequently and continuously engaged in the infraction of law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I shall not at this time attempt to enter into a consideration of the merits of this class of what may properly be termed "slanderous legislation."

Mr. BACON. What kind?

Mr. HEYBURN. Slanderous legislation. I class under that head all this kind of statutes, where some person conceives the idea that a great many other persons are corrupt or subject to corrupt influences and that it is necessary to restrain them, losing sight of the fact that our action here is merely the writing of a contract between the citizens of a government as to the rules by which they will be governed. We have passed over a number of sections of the same character, for the reasons given at the time. In writing into a statute that your neighbor shall not do things such as are enumerated in this section, there is an implication behind the words that were not your neighbor restrained from doing them he would be apt to do them. But I have yet to see a legislator or to read in the records of legislation where any legislator has classed himself among those who needed such restraint.

Mr. President, I am content to allow this legislation to drift along. It is enacted in response to a clamor which is not based upon a true and correct estimate of human character, especially the human character behind American citizenship. But legislative bodies have fallen into the habit of indulging in this kind of legislation, and whatever your committee may have thought of the wisdom of such legislation they did not feel that it was within their province or the scope of their duties to correct it or to attempt to correct it or to propose to amend it or to drop out such statutes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the Senator's statement of the purpose of the committee is the statement of an eminently proper attitude for them to occupy.

I can not agree with the Senator, however, in the denomination of this statute as a slanderous statute, or that it belongs to that class. There may be such a class. I will say to the Senator that the part of the statute which I had in mind was not the part which related to the legislative branch of the Government, but to the executive branch of the Government, and that as I understand this provision of law it relates to both. It speaks of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. President, the reason why I say it is not a slanderous statute and not be classed as a slanderous statute is this: We all know the fact that prior to its enactment there was the most regular and unblushing system under which all the employees in the Executive Departments were regularly held up by an undisguised demand upon them that they should contribute a certain percentage of their salaries to the needs and requirements of political campaigns. Everybody recollects the fact that such was the case; and it was to correct that gross and disgraceful evil that this statute was enacted.

Therefore, when this statute has been enacted to correct an evil which was confessed and undisguised and undeniable, it can not be classed as a slanderous statute. It was a proper statute to meet a great evil; and my suggestion was not with a view that possibly it might be eliminated from the statute books, but I simply took advantage of the opportunity to bring it in in that way in order that the attention of Senators might be called to the fact that this statute is being, not undisguisedly, as heretofore, but still in a degree, violated, if newspaper accounts and the private information which we have from employees of the Government are to be credited.

Now, whether or not there is any legislation which can be had which will make the statute any more binding than it is is another question. I think the statute itself is probably sufficiently explicit. The trouble is that it is not obeyed by those themselves charged with the high duty of executing the law. I am not speaking of the administration of the law by the courts, but those whose duty it is to see that the law is obeyed and properly executed. While the honorable Senator in charge of this bill has failed to utter his direct approval of what I say, I am satisfied that I have uttered no word which in his heart and judgment he does not approve.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 121. No person shall, in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any officer or employee of the United States mentioned in the preceding section, or in any navy-yard, fort, or arsenal, solicit in any manner whatever or receive any contribution of money or other thing of value for any political purpose whatever.

SEC. 122. No officer or employee of the United States mentioned in section 120, shall discharge, or promote, or degrade, or in any manner change the official rank or compensation of any other officer or employee, or promise or threaten so to do, for giving or withholding or neglecting to make any contribution of money or other valuable thing for any political purpose.

SEC. 123. No officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, give or hand over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or Member of or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever.

SEC. 124. Whoever shall violate any provision of the four preceding sections shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator from Idaho and his colleague who are in charge of the bill recognize the propriety of amendments as we go on at this stage?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am afraid if we were to enter upon that system it would be very confusing and perhaps delay the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BACON. I want to suggest a certain line of amendment which I think it would be well for the Committee on Revision to take into consideration, and if they approve I should be very glad if they would bring in, either as a separate section or as an amendment, a provision upon the line I am about to suggest.

I think, Mr. President, that it is a tremendous evil that officers—and the Senator, I think, will agree with me that it is a kindred subject—in the pay of the Government, charged with duties to be performed in the carrying on of the Government, should give their time and their energies to political campaigns. I can not see how it is any greater evil for an employee in the Executive Department to contribute money to a campaign than for an officer or an employee in the Executive Department to stunt his proper attention to his official duties and devote his time and energies to the advocacy and promotion of any political party or any person who may be interested in a campaign.

Mr. President, when a man takes office in the Executive Department of the Government, having nothing to do with the policies of the Government, having nothing to do with the enactment of law, confined solely in his duty to the execution of the law, I think it is not a very desirable thing as each political year comes around for him to abandon his post and convert himself into a political partisan. I am not speaking about a man who may be a candidate himself; it is the right of every man to be a candidate; but I am speaking of what we have seen in this country, not only under the administration of one party, but under the administration of either party.

So there is nothing partisan in what I am saying. It is not desirable to see officers of the Executive Departments, high officers and officers not so high, abandoning their positions, abandoning the proper attention to the discharge of their particular duties, and converting themselves into political partisans, parading the country seeking to promote any particular candidacy that they may favor or to oppose a candidacy which they may not favor.

I would be very glad to see a change in the law which would put a man on notice that when he accepted an office under this Government in the Executive Departments he was expected to attend to his business and nothing else, and that if he sought to contribute his energies in a political campaign he must lay down his office, in which he represents not one party, but all parties.

I do not know whether what I say commends itself to the good judgment of the learned Senators, but I think it would be a most valuable reform if we could put upon the statute books not only a condemnation of this pernicious practice, but a prohibition of it, which would insure its abandonment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHAPTER SIX.

OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE.

SEC. 125. [Whoever having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed, is true, shall willfully and contrary to such oath state or subscribe any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Rather a material change in existing law is presented by the section just read.

The change in this section consists in the omission of the provision declaring that a person found guilty of perjury shall be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him shall be reversed. In many of the States this bar has been removed, leaving the court or jury to say in each case what weight shall be given the testimony of any such witness.

The necessity for this change is obvious. A man is convicted of perjury; the judgment is often reversed, and the party stands clear and free from the charge, and yet individual litigants or the Government may have been deprived of his testimony merely because he was temporarily under the judgment of a verdict, so far as a verdict would disqualify. It has embarrassed the prosecution and it has embarrassed innumerable defendants, and the committee could see no good reason why the testimony of such a person should not be subjected to the ordinary rules as to its weight and application.

Mr. CLAY. If I understand the Senator correctly, the old law provides that when a defendant is convicted of the offense of perjury he shall be incapable of testifying hereafter in the courts unless the judgment of conviction is reversed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And in case it is reversed he would, of course, be capable of testifying. As I understand, the committee has stricken out that provision, and in the event a defendant is convicted of perjury he will hereafter be capable of testifying in the courts and the weight of his testimony will be left entirely to the jury.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the effect of the committee's recommendation.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator think that that is a wise change? Does not the Senator think that when a defendant is convicted of the offense of perjury and the judgment of the court below is sustained, he ought to be incapable of testifying in the courts thereafter?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not the existing law, Mr. President. It might be that the amendment suggested by the Senator would obviate the necessity of the amendment presented by the committee, but there is often an interval between the verdict and the decision of the court of last resort. A few days ago we had an instance of a judgment being reversed that had been rendered some two years or more ago. During the interval between the time of the rendition of the judgment of conviction and the time when the judgment is held to be void or nugatory the party would be deprived of the right to testify, and others would be deprived of the benefit of his testimony.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator means that under existing law if a defendant is convicted, from the period of his conviction until there is a reversal he is incapable of testifying, and after reversal he would be capable of testifying?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Now, the change made by the committee provides that after the conviction, it makes no difference whether the judgment is affirmed or reversed, the defendant convicted of perjury is always capable of testifying in the courts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, subject to the rule as to the weight of evidence.

I should like to make a suggestion. There are, as we see in the papers frequently of late, cases where the court suspends sentence of a man convicted of perjury—I have one in mind now where the sentence upon conviction of perjury has been suspended for more than two years—simply in order that the party's testimony may be used. If his testimony can be used under those circumstances merely because the formality of a judgment is lacking, his testimony is worth no more than if he had been absolutely sentenced.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator a question. After a defendant has been convicted of the offense of perjury and the judgment has been sustained by the highest court—it is a very aggravated offense—does not the Senator think he should be deprived of the right and privilege of testifying in the courts afterwards?

Mr. HEYBURN. So far as the rights of the defendant are concerned I think the Senator is correct, but oftentimes the only possible means of proving some fact material to sustaining the rights of individuals who would be perfectly helpless in the absence of the testimony lies in the mouth of the convicted person.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator another question. Does the Senator think that any citizen ought to be convicted of an offense involving imprisonment on the testimony of a person who has been convicted of the offense of perjury?

Mr. HEYBURN. I can speak only for myself. There were ten members of the committee. They were all of them men trained in the law and accustomed to its practice, and the section as reported represents the judgment of those ten members of the committee so far as it could be expressed.

I should prefer to discuss this question, if it is to be discussed, rather from an impersonal standpoint. The conviction under existing law deprives not only the party of the right to testify, but it deprives litigants of the right to have the testimony of the person convicted. A man may be convicted of perjury in a case where he himself was to be benefited by his testimony, which was false. A litigant should not be deprived of the benefit of that man's testimony if he were the only person who knew the facts involving the rights of some third party, where the person convicted would have no interest whatever. It is often the case that facts could be established by the testimony of a witness who has been disqualified if that witness could testify where it is practically certain that his testimony, not being influenced by any personal interest, would speak the truth. Many of the States, recognizing this fact and recognizing the further fact that the punishment intended to be inflicted upon the party convicted extends far beyond that party and is wreaked upon innocent parties, have relaxed this rule and have allowed the testimony of such a party to be received in evidence, especially so far as the rights of third parties are concerned.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that I do not believe litigants ought to be permitted to have this kind of testimony. If persons have cases in court, either civil or criminal, and they can not establish their contention by testimony presumed to be honest and truthful, then their contention ought to fail. I do not believe the Senator can sustain his contention simply upon the ground that a litigant may need such testimony in order to establish his case. I believe it is a bad change and that it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator will find that there are very few States in the Union which to-day have statutes of this character upon their books. It is in line with modern progress in reference to legislative matters to get rid of all statutes of this character. It is not so very long ago when we had a rule that a party in a case should not be permitted to testify. We got rid of that idea. A litigant in a case may now testify, subject simply to the rule that the fact of his interest shall be considered as affecting his testimony. It seems to me that precisely the same sort of rule ought to be applied here. When a party has been convicted of this offense, or indeed of any other offense, the fact of his conviction may be shown in the case to affect his credibility. But if a statute of this kind is to remain upon the Federal statute books, the effect of it is not so much to punish the defendant who has been convicted of this offense as it is to punish innocent litigants who had nothing whatever to do with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The SECRETARY. Page 63, section 126——

Mr. CLAY. What became of the other section? Was it adopted?

Mr. HEYBURN. Unless some proposition is submitted to amend it——

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator had better let it be passed over for the present.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 126. Whoever shall procure another to commit any perjury is guilty of subornation of perjury, and punishable as in the preceding section prescribed.

SEC. 127. Whoever shall feloniously steal, take away, alter, falsify, or otherwise avoid any record, writ, process, or other proceeding, in any court of the United States, by means whereof any judgment is reversed, made void, or does not take effect; or whoever shall acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, in any such court, any recognizance, bail, or judgment, in the name of any other person not privy or consenting to the same, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than seven years, or both; but this provision shall not extend to the acknowledgment of any judgment by an attorney, duly admitted, for any person against whom such judgment is had or given.

SEC. 128. [Whoever shall willfully and unlawfully conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, or destroy, or attempt to conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, or destroy, or, with intent to conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, destroy, or steal, shall take and carry away any record, proceeding, map, book, paper, document, or other thing, filed or deposited with any clerk or officer of any court of the United States, or in any public office, or with any judicial or public officer of the United States, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.]

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise simply to have some understanding about a matter connected with section 124. I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber when section 124 was considered. I have an amendment to offer at that point, but just as I was leaving I understood the Senator from Idaho to suggest that he thought it best not to insist upon individual amendments at this time. If I am correct in that understanding, I will pass this by.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the amendment consists of new matter, then I think it should not be interposed at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is entirely new matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it is merely an amendment that concerns the matter reported by the committee, then I think it should be considered at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. This is entirely new matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I would suggest to the Senator that it would be better to defer it, because it might be thought if it was entirely new legislation that it should go to an appropriate standing committee of this body.

Mr. CULBERSON. The bill is not there, though. An amendment to a bill ought to go to a committee if the bill itself was there. But this is an amendment to a bill pending in the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true when the bill is reported by a standing committee, but a bill reported under the special order of the two Houses of Congress has a different status, it seems to me, from that occupied by a bill reported from a standing committee, and the rule could hardly be the same. I doubt if the Senate would think it appropriate to send amendments to this bill back to the committee reporting it. The committee was authorized to report within certain limitations expressed in the act of Congress creating the committee. The committee was not created by the Senate alone. Therefore the Senate must share the exercise of its control over the committee with the other body. It would not be proper for the Senate alone to give instructions beyond the power expressed in the original act to this committee. It seems so to me.

Mr. CULBERSON. Without reference to the last suggestion made by the Senator, in view of his previous suggestion that amendments involving new matter should not be considered at this time, I will not press the amendments I have. They have been printed, however, and are on the tables of Senators. I will take them up later.

Mr. BACON. I will suggest, in order to meet the views of both Senators, possibly, it might be understood that when these controverted sections are taken up any section passed over to which it might be desired to make an amendment of new matter might then be considered.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that really is the understanding under which we are proceeding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest for the information of Senators that the whole bill is open to amendment.

Mr. BACON. I fully understand that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And no reservation is necessary.

Mr. BACON. Not only when we come into the Senate, but by a recurrence to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Precisely.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I so stated the other day.

As to section 128, which has just been read, and which is in brackets, the italics clearly indicate the amendments suggested. The words "without reference to the value of the record, paper, document, or proceeding so taken" are omitted as redundant, as they add nothing to the section.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask a question of some of the Senators in charge of the bill, solely for information. Senators will recall that we have recently had in this city a prosecution under this section of a public officer, in which there was an acquittal, and I have no doubt a proper acquittal, although I know nothing of the details of the case. I do not mean in what I am about to say to reflect in any manner upon the action of the court and jury in that case, but I use it simply for the purpose of getting information to see whether any further legislation is required.

It will be recalled by Senators that in that case there was no dispute, I think, as to the fact that the papers had been removed from the office. The defense, I think, was rested, not upon a denial of that fact, but upon some other facts connected with it, possibly that they were regarded as private papers, if I recollect aright.

I simply wish to know of the Senators whether they and their colleagues, the ten who were engaged in this serious work, recalled the fact of that trial and whether the section as it now stands is as strong as could be made, having reference to the facts which were developed and the rulings which were made in that case.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator that the understanding of the committee, at least my understanding of the case to which he refers, was that it rather turned upon the question as to whether or not certain papers were public documents.

Mr. BACON. Yes. They were in the office.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would hardly come within the scope of this section to enter upon a definition of what are public documents, and it would be a very extensive subject. It would be almost impossible by an enumeration to cover what constitute public documents. I think that would always be a question for the courts.

Mr. BACON. Of course I recognize the fact that there could not be a detailed enumeration, but there could be a generalization which would be quite complete and which would include all papers, letterpress books, and other books of that kind in an office which in any manner related to public affairs.

In the particular case that we have in view, so far as I could gather from the publications in the press—I did not attend the trial and I have not seen any official record of it—so far as there was a narration in the press of the issues made and the testimony involved, I think there was no dispute about the fact that the papers did relate to public matters, but it was claimed that while they related to public matters they were private letters, if I recollect correctly.

Now, it does seem to me that without the interminable detail, which the Senator says would be impracticable, there could be introduced into this section words which in general description would include all such papers, and I think they ought to be included if they relate to public matters.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would inquire of the Senator, if an attempt was made to amend this section along the line suggested by him, whether as a member of the Judiciary Committee of this body he would not think it proper that that kind of a bill should be referred to that committee?

Mr. BACON. I think the committee has repeatedly and very properly inserted words for the purpose of making the statute more comprehensive without in any manner changing the policy of it, but to make it more effective. The Senator is constantly calling our attention to changes of this kind which have been made, and I think properly made. In all the instances that I now recall the Senator has made that statement, I have concurred in the judgment of the committee that it was a proper change. But I think this is a matter of such importance, so vitally concerning the proper conduct of affairs in our Executive Departments particularly, that there should be the most comprehensive statute on the subject, so that an officer of the Government could not keep a letter book in his office for letter impressions and claim that it related to private matters, although it related to his judicial acts, judicial I mean in the sense in which an executive officer is frequently called to pass upon a matter in a quasi-judicial capacity, where regarding not only the letterpress copies but the original letters written to him concerning matters which he was to pass upon it may be set up as a defense in court that they were private matters and that he, therefore, was justified in their removal. I think that defense ought never to be permitted hereafter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know something about the case the Senator refers to, and I myself have had some experience in an executive office. We all know the case referred to. The claim was that the late Commissioner had destroyed certain records which he claimed were private papers and not records at all. The question was fairly presented to the jury whether they were records or were not records. That is about as far as you can go in a criminal case. You can not say that if a man receives a letter which has some slight reference to public affairs and all the balance to his private affairs, he shall treat it as a public record and put it in the public files.

In this case the Commissioner had been a Member of Congress for a number of years. He had a large experience in legislation and in writing to his people, and he had kept in a book for many years copies of his letters and copies of the letters received. He carried those books, when he became Commissioner, to the Land Office. He took the books that he had brought into the Land Office, the books that he had filled with letters which he had treated as private correspondence, and turned them into a room of the Department and left them there for two or three months at least, subject to examination by everybody. Finally he said to some subordinate, "Take those things and throw in the furnace and burn them up."

Mr. President, that man was put on trial for the burning up of those books, and a case that ought to have been tried, I say as a lawyer, in six days, took twelve weeks. Practically everything that that man had ever done in his lifetime came before the court. The jury found that the books were his private correspondence and not public documents.

I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that you can not go into details with these things, and the more you do the more difficult you will find it to enforce the law. When you have said that public documents shall not be destroyed you have left it to the jury of the country to determine whether they are, and certainly it should be left to some tribunal to determine. We can not make an absolute rule on the subject.

Mr. President, I said I had had some experience. I know that every executive officer will get letters that are not public and that are not intended to be public, and yet they are letters treating of public affairs. Hundreds of letters have come to me since I have been in public life, marked frequently as personal letters, and yet treating entirely of public affairs. If I were Secretary of the Interior, as I was on one occasion, I would receive that kind of letters. It must be left to the judgment of the officer who receives them to determine whether they are public or whether they are private. Every officer will receive letters dealing in some way with public affairs and perhaps in a greater degree with private affairs. It must be left to his judgment to determine whether he will put them in the files and treat them as public or whether he will put them in his own files and treat them as private.

I myself kept my official correspondence in the files of the Department. I kept my personal correspondence under my own control; when I left the Department I took those letters away from the Department; and when I thought they were no longer of any use to me, I destroyed them.

Mr. President, I wanted to say this in defense of the public officer who I believe meant to discharge his duties properly. I used to find some fault with him, not because I believed he was dishonest, but I found some fault with his judgment sometimes in his determination of public affairs, but I believe he was prosecuted for an offense he never had committed.

Mr. President, I do not want to make it easier to prosecute a man who has been in public life when he goes out than it now is. I realize that in these strenuous days men in public life have to come in contact with things that fifty years ago they did not come in contact with. I could say to the Senate now, as I do say, that I believe in the last few years there has been a system of espionage, of spying upon public offices by another branch, say, of the Government, such as never has been known in the history of this country, nor do I believe it ever has been known in the history of any free country before.

There is not any crying evil here, Mr. President, to be met. I believe that public officers are as honest, as a rule, to-day as they ever have been. I believe that the public demands more from them to-day than it did demand before, and, what is more, I think as a rule it receives from them more than it ever did before.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, Senators will recall that when I first brought this subject to the attention of the Senate I spoke of the fact that the officer alluded to by the Senator from Colorado, had been acquitted, and I had no doubt properly acquitted. I simply repeat that in order that the remarks of the Senator may not be understood by anyone as indicating that I had occupied any other attitude in regard to the matter.

I think I can go a little further than the Senator in regard to the character of public officials. I think anyone who will read the history of not only the very recent past, but for a time a little further back, will become convinced of the fact that the public officials of the present day are not only as honest as they have ever been in the past, but I believe they are more so. So there is nothing which I have said which can possibly be a reflection upon them.

Mr. TELLER. I did not understand the Senator to say they were not.

Mr. BACON. No; I understand the Senator. I do not think, when we seek to make the law clear, that we by so doing in any manner suggest that there is any greater necessity for a stringent law than there would otherwise be, but to put it in a position where an officer is less liable to have what the Senator from Colorado, I have no doubt, very properly terms an unjust prosecution, because of the fact that the law would be so clear that there would be no doubt as to whether or not the officer had confined himself within its restraining limits.

I have not any amendment to offer in regard to the matter, and I do not intend to offer any amendment to the particular section, but it seems to me that it would be well that public officials should be a little more guarded, and that there should be a well-understood provision of law, not that all letters which may have some reference to public affairs should be treated as belonging to the particular department to which the officer belongs, but that any letter which related to his judicial action should be so treated; and when I say judicial, the Senator will understand me as referring to the class of actions which officers of the Interior Department, for instance, have frequently performed, duties which are in their nature judicial, and as not intending in any manner to use a term which more properly belongs to an officer of the judicial department.

I say I think it would be a very proper provision of law under which an officer of an Executive Department would understand that a communication to him discussing the question of what decision he as an executive officer shall make is not a private communication. In whatever letter it may be found, and however it may have in it private matters, such a communication ought to be considered as an official communication and not one which he would be authorized to take away or to destroy, but which should belong to the permanent files of the Department.

So far as the particular officer is concerned, whose trial gave rise to this discussion, I join in what the Senator says of him. I know him personally, and I have known him personally and pleasantly for many years. I was very glad that the court decided, and I have no doubt correctly decided, that he had been guilty of no crime. But that case has none the less called my attention to the fact that the law is, in my opinion, incomplete in failing, not as the Senator from Idaho suggests, to go through a long detail of particularities, but in failing in general terms to indicate that letters which particularly relate not simply to public affairs, but to what an officer shall do in the performance of his duty, are not private communications, but belong properly to the files of the Department. I understand that in this case, while the particular matters were treated by this officer as private communications to him, and I have no doubt conscientiously treated by him as such, they did relate to what he as an officer should do in the discharge of his duty as to certain questions before him for decision.

I think the law ought to be so framed, Mr. President, that no officer on receiving a letter of that kind, because of the fact that it related to other matters, should treat it as a private communication but as an official act to be regarded thereafter as belonging to the files of the Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 129. [Whoever, having the custody of any record, proceeding, map, book, document, paper, or other thing specified in the preceding section, shall willfully and unlawfully conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, falsify, or destroy any such record, proceeding, map, book, document, paper, or thing, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both; and shall moreover forfeit his office and be forever afterward disqualified from holding any office under the Government of the United States.]

Mr. BURKETT. I was just reading that section. I should like to have the Senator explain the difference between it and the preceding section, and why a difference is made in the penalty.

Mr. HEYBURN. The preceding section was based upon section 5403 of the Revised Statutes, in which the penalty was a fine of not more than $1,000 and a term of imprisonment at hard labor of not more than three years. That penalty was carried into section 128. It was a part of the act of 1853. The section under consideration, section 129, is taken from the Revised Statutes, section 5408, and is a part of the same act as the preceding section. In section 5408 of the Revised Statutes the penalty is to be a fine of not more than $2,000 and a term of imprisonment at hard labor of not more than three years, or both. That is carried into section 129. While the offense is similar in many ways, there is this difference: Section 128 provides that—

Whoever shall willfully and unlawfully conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, or destroy, or attempt * * * with intent to conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, destroy, or steal * * * any record, proceeding, map, book, paper, * * * filed or deposited with any clerk or officer of any court of the United States, or in any public office, or with any judicial or public officer of the United States, shall be fined—as is provided in the section.

Now, if the Senator will observe the difference in the enumeration of the offense, he will, I think, see the intent of the legislature in the same act originally—an act passed in 1853, long upon the statute books—and he will see the reason for the difference in the penalty. Section 129 provides that—

Whoever, having the custody of any record—

In the first place, the offense was committed by a person not having the custody of the record; in the second place, he is lawfully in possession of the record or the paper. This section 129 provides that—describing substantially the same articles described in section 128, shall take them, he shall be fined as is provided in the section. The first section covers the taking by a person who has no business to interfere with them, who is not rightfully in their possession. The second covers only the cases of a misuse or a diverted use of papers rightfully in the possession of the party taking them.

The wisdom of the original enactment I will not undertake to defend. The committee did not feel justified in attempting to change the existing law on that subject, it having been enacted in the same statute. Had it been enacted in separate statutes, passed at long intervals, there might have been some reason for arriving at the conclusion that Congress had not taken into consideration the provisions of existing law and had made an apparent if not a real inconsistent provision with reference to the punishment. But where Congress in deliberating upon a single statute considered, at the time of the enactment of the law, that one enumeration of offenses should be punished in a given way and that another enumeration of offenses that could be committed only by a different class of persons from those contained in the preceding section should be punished in another way, the committee did not feel that they would be justified in recommending any change.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] to the fact that section 129 contains the additional punishment that a person who, having the custody of one of these records, shall destroy or carry it away, shall forfeit his office and forever be disqualified from holding any office under the Government of the United States, a punishment which could not apply to the case in section 128, because that dealt with persons who might or might not be officers. It was thought where an officer of the Government had so far abused his trust as to carry away or destroy documents committed to his care, that, in addition to the ordinary punishment, he should forfeit his office and should be disqualified.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 130. Whoever shall forge the signature of any judge, register, or other officer of any court of the United States, or of any Territory thereof, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of any such court, or shall knowingly concur in using any such forged or counterfeit signature or seal, for the purpose of authenticating any proceeding or document, or shall tender in evidence any such proceeding or document with a false or counterfeit signature of any such judge, register, or other officer, or a false or counterfeit seal of the court, subscribed or attached thereto, knowing such signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

SEC. 131. [Whoever, directly or indirectly, shall give or offer, or cause to be given or offered, any money, property, or value of any kind, or any promise or agreement therefor, or any other bribe, to any judge, judicial officer, or other person authorized by any law of the United States to hear or determine any question, matter, cause, proceeding, or controversy, with intent to influence his action, vote, opinion, or decision thereon, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both; and shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. The punishment for a violation of section 5449, which is the section of the Revised Statutes representing the proposed section 131, is a fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court. A maximum fine and imprisonment has been reported by the committee. The enlargement of the scope of the section is indicated by the language printed in italics. The enlargement is in response to changed conditions largely. The existing law was enacted on the 30th of April, 1790, and there have been a good many changes in conditions since that time. It was found necessary to enlarge the provisions of the statute to meet new conditions that did not exist at the time of the enactment of the original law.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 132. Whoever, being a judge of a court of the United States, shall in anywise accept or receive any sum of money, or other bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, obligation, gift, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, with the intent to be influenced thereby in any opinion, judgment, or decree in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause depending before him, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both; and shall be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire, although that section is not in brackets, to call the attention of Senators to a very important change. Under existing law there is no limit to the fine or imprisonment which may be imposed on a judge for a violation of its provisions. The committee have recommended a maximum punishment. The existing law provides that upon conviction for the offense described in section 5490 of the Revised Statutes the judge may be fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, and he shall be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States. He might be fined $29,000,000 and imprisoned for life. The committee thought that it would be well to fix the maximum punishment. So they have reported the section carrying a maximum punishment of not more than $20,000 and of imprisonment not more than fifteen years. It would be difficult to conceive of a condition that would call for a greater punishment than that.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he specifies the sum of $29,000,000 as an amount of fine which it might be excessive to impose in any case?

Mr. HEYBURN. I only suggested that because it was a convenient figure and one with which we have become more or less familiar.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Sections 133 and 134 of the bill, being in italics, were not read.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 135. [Whoever corruptly, or by threats or force, or by any threatening letter or communication, shall endeavor to influence, intimidate, or impede any witness, in any court of the United States or before any United States commissioner or officer acting as such commissioner, or any grand or petit juror, or officer in or of any court of the United States, or officer who may be serving at any examination or other proceeding before any United States commissioner or officer acting as such commissioner, in the discharge of his duty, or who corruptly or by threats of force, or by any threatening letter or communication, shall influence, obstruct, or impede, or endeavor to influence, obstruct, or impede, the due administration of justice therein, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that section is a molding together of sections 5399 and 5404 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the first section, 5399, being a provision contained in the act of March 2, 1831, and section 5404 being a provision contained in the act of June 10, 1872—statutes enacted at long intervals. The section does nothing more than mold them into a single section and broaden them to meet the changed conditions in regard to offices created since the enactment of the original statute.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 136. [If two or more persons conspire to deter by force, intimidation, or threat any party or witness in any court of the United States, or in any examination before a United States commissioner or officer acting as such commissioner, from attending such court or examination, or from testifying to any matter pending therein freely, fully, and truthfully, or to injure such party or witness in his person or property on account of his having so attended or testified, or to influence the verdict, presentment, or indictment of any grand or petit juror in any such court, or to injure such juror in his person or property on account of any verdict, presentment, or indictment lawfully assented to by him, or on account of his being or having been such juror, each of such persons shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, section 136 is derived from section 5406 of the Revised Statutes. Section 5406 relates only to a limited jurisdiction. Your committee thought it proper that the provision should be extended generally to all United States courts; that is to say, that offenses committed within the jurisdiction of any United States court should be punished as offenses committed within the limits of specified United States courts in existing law are punished. As stated in the report—

Section 136: The change in this section consists in the omission from the first line of the words "in any State or Territory," so that the acts denounced in the section may be punished when committed with respect to witnesses called, or jurors chosen, in any court of the United States; and also in making the provisions of the section applicable to hearings before United States commissioners or officers acting as such.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 137. [Whoever shall attempt to influence the action or decision of any grand or petit juror of any court of the United States upon any issue or matter pending before such juror, or before the jury of which he is a member, or pertaining to his duties, by writing or sending to him any letter or any communication, in print or writing, in relation to such issue or matter, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the only change there consists in the omission of the words "without the order previously obtained of the court before which the juror is summoned." That language seems to be entirely unnecessary and to perform no function in making the section effective.

The reading was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 139. Whenever any marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person has in his custody any prisoner by virtue of process issued under the laws of the United States by any court, judge, or commissioner, and such marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person voluntarily suffers such prisoner to escape, he shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

SEC. 140. The preceding section shall be construed to apply not only to cases in which the prisoner who escaped was charged or found guilty of an offense against the laws of the United States, and to cases in which the prisoner may be in custody charged with offenses against any foreign government with which the United States have treaties of extradition, but also to cases in which the prisoner may be held in custody for removal to or from the Philippine Islands as now provided by law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 140 has been revised to an extent to conform to existing and recent conditions. To the section has been added language carrying into it the provisions of section 2 of the act of February 6, 1905, relative to the extradition of persons to and from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that the word "now" before the word "provided" should be stricken out, because there may be changes in the law in regard to that matter, and that would specifically limit it to the law as it now exists? I think it should read "as provided by law."

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator's suggestion a good one—"as provided by law." Then let the court say whether or not an offense committed under the particular conditions could be punished under future legislation or in the absence of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose an amendment to the section?

Mr. HEYBURN. I propose to amend the report of the committee by striking out the word "now" in line 8, section 140, before the word "provided."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 140, on page 69, line 23, of the printed bill before the word "provided," by striking out the word "now."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it occurs to me, before passing over that section, that perhaps we have not changed it. The language now stands:

But also to cases in which the prisoner may be held in custody for removal to or from the Philippine Islands as provided by law.

The court would construe that, under a familiar rule of construction, to be "as now provided by law."

Mr. BACON. Well, "as provided by law" at the time of the commission of the offense.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; "as provided by law." That would be held to apply to the enactment of the statute.

Mr. BACON. I do not think it would.

Mr. HEYBURN. If we want to make it applicable to future legislation I think we would have to express ourselves a little more explicitly than that.

Mr. BACON. Of course, Mr. President, I will defer to the Senator in charge of the bill; I shall not insist on my views; but I think the words "as provided by law" would undoubtedly indicate any law which was in existence at the time of the commission of the offense.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is a precedent, I know, for this kind of legislation, but it seems to me that if I had been the Senator in charge of this provision I would have left it out and tried to have adapted the law to the cases which it was desired to cover. I think there is not anything more vicious in legislation than an attempt to construe the law by the legislative body. The legislative body should frame the law and allow the courts to construe it. I repeat, I know there is a precedent for this, of course, but it is a vicious practice for a legislative body to assume to construe the law. To frame the law in as few words as possible and then allow the courts to construe it seems to me to be the proper course for a legislative body.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, not to interrupt the Senator, I would suggest——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to make any suggestion further than to say that, as I understand the Senator has stricken out the word "now," I think it will be exactly the same as if he had left out the words "as now provided by law."

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to say, before leaving the section, that the provision which the Senator suggests as being objectionable is existing law. Had it not been existing law I think the committee would not have recommended it.

Mr. TELLER. It is a repetition of what is in the statutes?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. It was not put in by the committee at all.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 141. [Whoever shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer of the United States, or other person duly authorized, in serving, or attempting to serve or execute, any mesne process or warrant, or any rule or order, or any other legal or judicial writ or process of any court of the United States, or United States commissioner, or shall assault, beat, or wound any officer or other person duly authorized, in serving or executing any such writ, rule, order, process, warrant, or other legal or judicial writ or process, shall be fined not more than $300 and imprisoned not more than one year.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, aside from a transposition of the language of the section in the interest of better expression the other change consists in extending its provisions to any person authorized to serve or execute any writ or process and to writs and processes issued by United States commissioners. It is merely extending the application of the section so as to be all-comprehensive, to cover all classes of officers who are ordinarily invested with the power of serving and executing processes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 142. [Whoever shall rescue, or attempt to rescue, from the custody of any officer or person lawfully assisting him, any person arrested upon a warrant or other process issued under the provisions of any law of the United States, or shall, directly or indirectly, aid, abet, or assist any person so arrested to escape from the custody of such officer or other person, or shall harbor or conceal any person for whose arrest a warrant or process has been so issued, so as to prevent his discovery and arrest, after notice or knowledge of the fact that a warrant or process has been issued for the apprehension of such person, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this section was, I might correctly say, modernized. The reference to sections 1984 and 1985, under the title "Civil rights," was omitted, and the section was made applicable under any law of the United States.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 143. Whoever, by force, shall set at liberty or rescue any person found guilty in any court of the United States of any capital crime, while going to execution or during execution, shall be fined not more than $25,000, and imprisoned not more than twenty-five years.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, as I understand, under the law as it is now, if a man is sentenced to be executed and he is rescued by another, the person rescuing the prisoner suffers the death penalty. Is it not true, then, that the section just read changes that and leaves the punishment to the discretion of the judge? Under it the presiding judge can fine or imprison the rescuer from one to twenty-five years. If a man has been sentenced to be executed and a party comes to his rescue and saves him from execution, ought not the rescuer to be tried for murder, convicted, and sentenced to death? In other words, if he frees a person charged with a capital offense, ought not the one responsible for the escape of the prisoner have the same penalty inflicted on him? As I understand, that is the law in many of the States at the present time.

Mr. HEYBURN. The existing law reads as follows:

SEC. 5400. Every person who, by force, sets at liberty or rescues any person found guilty of any capital crime, while going to execution or during execution, shall suffer death.

Mr. CLAY. That is the law at present?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. There is no latitude for the consideration of the circumstances or conditions. The result has been that in some instances juries have refused to convict at all, because there was no latitude for discretion to be exercised by the court, and, instead of the sternness of the law being in the interest of the certainty of punishment, it has just the opposite effect. Juries refuse to convict because of their knowledge that there is but one penalty. The committee have reported a very severe penalty, "shall be fined not more than $25,000, and imprisoned not more than twenty-five years." That gives the court a very wide discretion to consider the peculiar circumstances of each case.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FULTON. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I simply wish to say, Mr. President, that I am in hearty accord with the purpose of the committee in recommending this change. I think the death penalty inflexibly imposed, as it is by existing law, is entirely too extreme. There are a great many good people—hundreds of thousands, and it is difficult to say that they are not in the majority; they certainly are in many States—who oppose the death penalty for any crime; who even believe that the law ought not to take life. While I do not go to that extent in my philosophy and believe there are crimes which should be punished by death, yet it does not seem to me that this is one of them. Simply rescuing a person who has been condemned to death is not a crime deserving so severe a punishment. He may be retaken or made to suffer the penalty, probably in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. But be that as it may, the offense does not rise to that enormity that requires the taking of human life. So I think this proposed amendment is an improvement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the amendment in question was recommended by the committee because it was believed that the imposition of the death penalty in that kind of a case was altogether too drastic. We can all readily imagine cases where such a punishment would be absolutely barbarous. Suppose a case where the motives are those of sentiment purely; where, for example, a man is under sentence of death and his son undertakes to rescue him; or, vice versa, where the son is under sentence of death and the father undertakes to rescue him, impelled purely by motives of sentiment. It seems to me in such a case the imposition of the death penalty would be absolutely a barbarous punishment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, before leaving this section I would suggest that at the time of the enactment of the existing law in 1790 the death penalty was inflicted for a great many crimes that are now not punishable in that way. A different sentiment existed at that time.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, I will say that there might be cases where condemned prisoners are rescued in which the circumstances would be extenuating and where there ought to be a less penalty than the death penalty; but there are doubtless cases which might arise where the death penalty ought to be inflicted.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had promised that at 4 o'clock I would ask to lay aside the unfinished business; but I would suggest that there are only three or four sections to finish this chapter, and unless there is objection I should like to have it finished.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 144. Whoever, by force, shall set at liberty or rescue any person who, before conviction, stands committed for any capital crime; or whoever, by force, shall set at liberty or rescue any person committed for or convicted of any offense other than capital, shall be fined not more than $500, and imprisoned not more than one year.

SEC. 145. [Whoever, by force, shall rescue or attempt to rescue, from the custody of any marshal or his officers, the dead body of an executed offender, while it is being conveyed to a place of dissection, as provided by section 328 hereof, or by force shall rescue or attempt to rescue such body from the place where it has been deposited for dissection in pursuance of that section, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

SEC. 146. Whoever shall, under a threat of informing, or as a consideration for not informing, against any violation of any law of the United States, demand or receive any money or other valuable thing, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 147. [Whoever, having knowledge of the actual commission of the crime of murder or other felony cognizable by the courts of the United States, conceals and does not as soon as may be disclose and make known the same to some one of the judges or other persons in civil or military authority under the United States, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.]

Mr. BACON. I simply want to say that I think the committee could very properly have exercised a little discretion there and recommended that that section be not kept upon the statute books. I do not think that is a proper law. That is another part of the bloody code of 1790.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true.

Mr. BACON. It is entirely too comprehensive. Of course we can conceive of cases where one is guilty of a grave dereliction of duty in failing to expose knowledge of the commission of a crime; but the question of the degree of knowledge which shall bring a man within the condemnation of this statute is very debatable. Under the section it has no limitation whatever. While I will not make any motion in regard to the matter, I think it might be well to understand that it is open hereafter—of course it is anyhow, without the understanding—but I think it might be very well to have it understood that the Senate will take into consideration the elimination of that section from the bill. I do not think it is a proper law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that——

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. As I understand, this section is much broader than the old statute. The old statute confined it simply to cases under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, such as—murder or other felony on the high seas, or within any fort, arsenal, dockyard, magazine, or other place or district of country under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the committee simply struck out the enumeration of the places, because, if the section should exist at all, it should apply to any place where the United States court has jurisdiction. The offense would be just as grave without regard to where it was committed. The existing law was enacted in the "black-letter" days, if I may so denominate them, of legislation, when, as I have said, a great many crimes that are now treated as comparatively minor offenses were punishable with death. We must take that into consideration. I agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that were this a question of original legislation I probably should feel impelled to record my vote against it, but there are a great many important things——

Mr. BACON. There is another reason, if the Senator will pardon me, why it should be eliminated from the law, and that is this: At the time when the act of 1790 was passed the range of felonies was very much more limited than it is now. We have upon the statute books provisions which have been passed here already in this report which are somewhat political in their nature, which were enacted forty years ago, at a time of great political excitement, sectional antagonism, and all that, in this country, which, by the way, ought to be taken out altogether, but which have not been taken out. I can conceive of how almost an entire community, or a great proportion of it at least, could be charged with having knowledge under some of these conspiracy provisions which are still upon the books, and which, as I say, ought to be taken out. I hope Senators will seriously take into consideration the motion at the proper time—they need not do so now—for the elimination of this provision from the body of the law. I think it ought to come out.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 22, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 21, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7606. An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the village of Bemidji, in Beltrami County, Minn.," approved March 3, 1905.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2901. An act authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims;

S. 2028. An act to amend section 605 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to corporations;

S. 438. An act to divide the State of Oregon into two judicial districts; and

S. 902. An act authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Also the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2725) to extend the time for the completion of the building of dam across the Mississippi River near the village of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn.

REVISION OF THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701. When the committee rose on Thursday last by unanimous consent two amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas were pending. Without objection, the Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 112a. That it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, or sleeping car, dining car, steamboat, express, telegraph or telephone company, or any company incorporated by act of the Congress of the United States, or any corporation or firm engaged in interstate commerce, to give to any Senator or Representative of the Congress of the United States, or to any judge or justice of any court of the United States, any free transportation of person or property, or frank, franking privilege, or money, or other thing of value; and any company or person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be punished by fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 for each such offense; and any officer or agent of such company or companies who shall violate any provisions of this section shall be punished by fine not to exceed $5,000, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than six months nor more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"That if any Senator or Representative in the Congress of the United States, or any judge or justice of any court of the United States, shall receive from any railroad, steamboat, sleeping car, dining car, or express company, telegraph or telephone company, or any company chartered by an act of Congress, or any corporation or firm engaged in interstate commerce, or officer or agent of any such firm, company, or companies, any free transportation of person or property, or any frank or franking privilege, or gift of money or other thing of value, he shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not to exceed $1,000, or by imprisonment not to exceed one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall forever be barred from holding office under the Government of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some remarks in furtherance of the amendments offered by me.

The two amendments reported here are sections 112a and 112b. The first simply says that the Congress of the United States and the Federal judiciary shall not receive gifts from the public-service corporations and the trusts of this country. The second one is that the Congress of the United States shall not be employed and paid as the attorneys, agents, or officers of public-service corporations of the United States. Both these amendments are of great importance, not only as affecting the honor of the Congress of the United States, but also the interests of the people in reference to legislative matters. If what I propose here were already the law, there is not a man in this House would dare propose its repeal—not one. It is not the law now, but it should be made the law. The Congress of the United States should be composed of men not only competent, able, and honest, but absolutely disinterested as well. We permit no man on a jury who is interested in the cause to be decided. The interest of a witness often disqualifies him and always detracts from the weight of his evidence. A lack of confidence arises where an interest is disclosed. The statement of one's agent, attorney, or representative is received with caution.

If a judge upon the bench has any interest whatever in a pending cause or has ever advised in reference thereto, he is disqualified to sit in that case. If a lawyer is employed on one side of a case, he can not be retained upon the other side. A Member representing a railroad is not a proper person to represent the people in railroad regulation.

It would seem that perhaps the question of propriety would control legislative bodies, that the ethics of the Congress might be sufficient; but, Mr. Chairman, it is well known that the proprieties do not prevent Members from receiving employment by the railroads and other public-service corporations. Not only a few, but many receive gifts from such corporations and use franks and privileges worth large amounts of money. It is understood that when a gift is made an obligation ensues. The standard of manhood may be estimated largely by the amount of gratitude displayed. To receive a gift means to put you under obligation to the person that gives it, and it is understood that obligation will be paid in kind whenever occasion offers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I ask that my time be extended.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If, as I was saying, a gift is received, it is understood, among men of high moral character, as well as among those of any standard of morals, that there is a certain obligation accepted with the gift recognized as gratitude. It is understood that there is even "honor among thieves." They may steal from the public, they may rob the passer along the highway, but they are supposed to divide in honor the plunder that they take.

When the people of the United States employ and intrust you and me to come here and make laws for them we ought to consider the situation, and if the present condition is such as to reflect upon the honor of the Congress it ought to be corrected. You owe it to the people of this country not only that you do what is right but that you avoid the "appearance of evil." Is there any man within the sound of my voice who will deny that it is generally understood in this country—and to speak plainly, you and I know it to be a fact—that a large percentage of the Congress of the United States has been in the habit of receiving presents from public-service corporations, such as free use of railroads, telegraphs, and telephones, worth a great amount of money to men who have use for them. If a railroad company was to offer you or me a hundred dollars in money, and we were to take it, we could not cover up the appearance of that. Every man would say, "Why, there is a gift of a hundred dollars!" a small amount of money, but it is money; and he would exclaim, "What did he receive it for?" "Why was it given?" It would not be called a courtesy—it would be a bribe! But privileges may be accepted which are worth thousands of dollars, and the same questions are not asked, the same idea is not conveyed. The system of such giving has been habitually designated as "extending courtesies."

[The Chairman rapped with his gavel for order.]

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I think, Mr. Chairman, I can make myself heard well enough so that everybody who desires to hear me can do so, if gentlemen who do not desire to hear will not disturb by noise or converse in too loud a tone. I am telling you some things you ought to hear, and I am saying them in all good purpose. I do not propose to say some things that could truthfully be said here, but that would perhaps hurt; I am appealing to the Members of this House, and I do not appeal in vain when I appeal to the manhood and honor of the representatives of the people of the United States. I say where a condition exists, where in appearance the honor of the Congress is attacked before the country, and there is any ground on which to base scandal, if in any way we can wipe out that appearance or remove such ground—if there is anything we can do that will clear up the atmosphere and promote the honor of the Congress of the United States—it is our duty to do it; and we will do it.

Gentlemen, this is not a new proposition. The committee having in charge this bill has no right to take the position that you and I should not vote this legislation into the statute books because it is not embraced in their bill. Why, in the existing law and in the new propositions that they have brought forward, penal legislation is enacted and sought to be enacted here in this bill, saying that Members of Congress, if they do certain things, shall be sent to the penitentiary. Is it possible that the opponents of this measure will claim it is proper that the Congress should receive gifts or accept employment from public-service corporations? Do you mean to say that you think Members of Congress are not human?

Why is it, then, that you pass a law saying a Member of Congress shall not take a bribe? If it is necessary to have a law to say that a Member of Congress shall not take bribes, why leave it open so that he can take gifts or employment? A gift is simply a general bribe when it comes from a public-service corporation to a lawmaker or Representative of the people. It is intended to influence his judgment, and you know it; and when you receive it you receive that which you ought not to take, and you know it. But this system grew up gradually. It did not come all in a day. It has been absorbed by Congress and the courts and the State legislatures as a subtle poison, stealing its way into the vitals of the country. It has grown up, and it is against this growth, against this condition that I inveigh. This legislation has been before Congress for several years. During the Fifty-ninth Congress this first proposition was reported unanimously by a subcommittee of the Judiciary. It was not reported to the House because it was defeated on a tie vote in committee. It is no new thing. I have not met a Member yet but who says it ought to be the law. I ask you, then, why not make it the law? Do you say there is no necessity for it? The people feel the need of it. The trusts are plowing with their cattle. If it was the law, would you repeal it? Then why not let it go into the statute now? Why not make it as an amendment to this bill? Why not let it be considered as a nonpartisan matter, as it should be?

No matter what the political party we belong to may desire about it, we are Members of Congress, we are intrusted by the people of the United States to make the laws, and this is a matter that affects the honor and the good name of every Congressman. Now, gentlemen, why not put it into the code, not by some special bill urged by a political party, but put it there by the action of Congress sitting to revise the penal laws and supplying what has been overlooked in the past. The reason this law was not in our Constitution was because public-service corporations did not exist in those days as they do now. The great public-service corporations of to-day were unknown when our fathers made the Constitution; but they, in their wisdom, understood that a gift to one who was a servant of the people was a dangerous thing. Even in that day, when patriotism was at its very height, when these men who had given their lives to the service of their country had just won its independence, they put in the Constitution, the fundamental law of the land, a guaranty that no servant of the people, no officer of this Government, should receive any gift or emolument from any prince, king, or foreign state. Why did they put that in the Constitution? Their representatives were honorable men and their patriotism was at its very height; they had just come out of a bloody war, and every man was ready to give his life for his country, and yet our forefathers saw the necessity of guarding against these gifts.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Suppose a firm in New York is engaged in manufacturing goods which go into interstate commerce, and they have an attorney, and the attorney happens to be elected to Congress. During vacation that same firm or corporation employs the attorney to do its business. Would that attorney be liable under the provisions of this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. He certainly would, if the firm was engaged in interstate commerce. "No man can serve two masters." If he wants to serve the corporation, let him do it; but, if he wants to serve the people of the United States, let him drop the corporation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But his constitutional obligations do not require him to sit idle all through the vacation?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. No; and it would not violate the law if he consulted the Constitution and studied his duties to the people by whom he was elected. If he wants to represent the people in the legislature or in the Congress of the United States, he ought to quit the railroad; because the railroad comes up (properly, of course) on one side and the people on the other. The Representatives and Senators should serve the people only.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am not talking about public-service corporations——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I am talking about anybody that is elected to the legislature or to Congress who wants also to serve the special interests.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am talking about manufacturing corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That applies the same way. Any concern that has an interest in special legislation before the Congress ought to be represented by somebody who is not on the floor of this House.

Mr. GRONNA rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that under the Hepburn law the transportation company can not issue a pass which is in the nature of a gift?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Oh, perhaps so; but I will state to my friend that the pass is a mere incident. The principle involved is that you must not receive a gift. Why not make it read in that way? Why say that you shall not receive a dog, or a horse, or a cow, or a mule, or a goat, or a pass? Why name all the things of the earth? Why not simply say that you shall not receive a gift? That includes them all. That is what this amendment means. As I was saying a while ago, our forefathers guarded against this evil. They realized the fact that the danger then was from without; that kings, princes, and foreign states were liable to gain influence with the officers of this Government by giving them gifts. To-day we find that the great public-service corporations of this country—and most of them are in the hands, at least to some extent, of what we call the trusts—come here and they influence this House; they influence the whole Congress. How? Why they use their arguments; they use their just and lawful means; and they give gifts to Members who will receive them; they give employment to Members who will take such employment; and I do not believe there is a Member here who will say that he thinks they lose anything by those gifts, or that they make a mistake when they pay for the employment. It pays them to do it; it pays the Members who take it; and the people are the losers.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is the gentleman's amendment broad enough to make it a criminal offense for a corporation engaged in interstate business to loan a Senator or Representative any sum of money?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Well, it does not exactly include that, but if the loan was not to be repaid [laughter], if it was really in fact a gift for an improper purpose, I think, as a matter of fact, if we could show what the purpose was, show the interest of that party, and that it was for official corruption, we could get that man and that company under the bribery law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there any practice of that kind within the gentleman's knowledge that requires legislation of that broad and drastic character?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I don't know of any particular instance that I care to mention, or that I could testify to personally. I am not speaking personally. I am talking impersonally. I am not here to attack any man, or reflect upon any man, or to hurt the feelings of any Member. I am here simply talking about a situation, and I will ask the gentleman this question——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent that his colleague may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I want to make a point of order first. I am speaking on a matter——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I want to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The point of order I was going to make—I will make it anyway—it is this: I have an idea that under our rules no man has a right to vote on these matters, or take any part in them, if he is interested, and I hope the Chair will not recognize any gentleman to object to my remarks if that gentleman is a representative of any public-service corporation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not be able to pass on that question.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is one reason, Mr. Chairman, for this legislation—they don't bear any tag on them, Mr. Chairman; they don't bear any tag or anything of that kind; we can not identify them; we can not tell who they are.

Mr. DALZELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I only have five minutes, and he won't let me have any more time. I yield for a question.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Texas means to insinuate that I have any connection——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania should hear me out before he interrupts——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not insinuate anything of that kind.

Mr. DALZELL. That is what the gentleman said, and he gets applause on the other side.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I make the point that nobody ought to interrupt me if he is representing a public-service corporation. If the gentleman says he does not do that, it does not apply to him; if he does represent any such corporation, it does apply to him. That is all there is about it. I insinuate nothing.

Mr. DALZELL. I understood the gentleman to insinuate——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not insinuate anything.

Mr. DALZELL. I protest against any such insinuation on the floor of this House, unless the gentleman has some knowledge to justify him in making such an insinuation.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman disavows any insinuation.

Mr. DALZELL. His disavowal and his language do not go together.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Does the gentleman say that he does not represent a public-service corporation?

Mr. DALZELL. I represent no corporation of any kind, nor have I for twenty years.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. We are very glad to hear that. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, then, Mr. Chairman, you see exactly how it is. As long as the law stands as it is a Member of Congress can not appear before the Departments; he can not have any interest in a contract—you cut him off by law; he can not take a bribe unless he is put in the penitentiary, but he can receive gifts and employment; and as long as this is so he can be slandered by men who wish Congress to stand on as low a plane as possible. If you enact this law, no man can say Members of Congress are receiving gifts of any kind or that Members of Congress are in the pay of public-service corporations. Then should any man charge such a thing, it would be charging a crime, and he would have to make good his word or stand for a liar. Why not clear the fair name of this Congress? The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he has not been a representative of a public-service corporation for twenty years, and has only been in Congress twenty-two years; and, I dare say, that many people have been unkind enough to slander that man. I say remove the cause.

Mr. DENBY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. DENBY. Does the gentleman from Texas understand the measure to preclude any farmer from employing a lawyer to represent——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If the gentleman thinks it does, he really ought to resign his seat and have somebody come here who can understand plain words; there can be no such construction given the amendment.

Mr. DENBY. The farmer's product is interstate commerce.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Nobody on earth would give that construction or accept it. Don't interrupt me in that way——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I object to the consideration of this proposition at this time for three separate reasons: First, it is not at all germane to the subject under consideration. The title we are now considering has absolute reference to official duties. Section 112 and section 113 refer to an attempt to bribe a Member of Congress or Senator in reference to anything that comes before him in his official capacity, and the attempt to introduce this question here—an amendment that relates to accepting a pass or other privilege from an interstate corporation without reference to his official duties—would mar absolutely the symmetry of this revision. If it has any place whatever, if it ought to be considered at any time, it ought to be considered under another title altogether. That title will be before this House at some time in the near future in another part of this law now before the committee, and upon which it expects soon to report. This subject has already received the attention of the Congress. In June, 1906, in the rate bill nearly every subject sought to be covered by this section was provided for. You all remember that carefully considered bill in the first section defines a common carrier. That definition of a common carrier included almost everybody that is included in this section of the bill. It included steamboat transportation, railroad transportation, express companies, and sleeping car companies, but did not include the two other classes of corporations included in the amendment, to wit: Telephone or telegraph companies. Under this rate law of 1906 Members of Congress and Senators are absolutely prohibited from receiving any passes, discrimination, or consideration at all from any of the said companies embraced in this new section which the gentleman asks us to incorporate in this title. Therefore, I say to the gentleman from Texas that if this new section has any reference to this law, which I think it has, and if it ought to be considered at any time, it ought to be considered under title 52, when we come to a revision of the rate law, or the interstate-commerce law, to which it would be germane, and should not be included in the present title, where it would disturb or destroy the systematic classification in the proposed revision.

For another reason, Mr. Chairman, I object to its consideration at this time. The gentleman in his speech upon the subject has told you the facts—that these provisions were before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or, I think he said, before the Judiciary Committee, in connection with this bill of 1903, and that it failed to get the approval of that committee.

Now, therefore, for the reasons heretofore stated by this committee as a cardinal principal of procedure—that it is not the purpose of the present revision to consider now subject-matters of legislation upon which committees of the Congress have refused to pass favorably, or any provision of law that brings under the operation of a criminal statute a class of persons different from those under the existing law, or which brings as a definition of crime a subject other than that upon which Congress has not heretofore seen fit to legislate upon—to include either of these classes of subjects in this revision is entirely apart from and foreign to the purposes of the revision itself. Therefore I ask that this amendment shall be voted down without a consideration upon its merits.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am not only opposed to this amendment for the reasons suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], but I am opposed to the amendment itself. I have been in Congress several years and I have not lost confidence in the character of the men that are sent here to represent the people. They are generally picked men from their districts, not only on account of their intellectual abilities, but on account of their integrity in every relation and walk of life. And I do not like to see a gentleman who happens to get a seat here rise in his place with an amendment like this—one that casts a slur upon every gentleman who holds a seat in this honorable body, singling them out and thinking to prevent them from engaging in the average and ordinary avocations of life. Under this amendment they could not engage in any business whatever with a corporation, and if the gentleman has left anything out it seems to be because he has overlooked it in drawing his amendment, although he has not overlooked it in the temper of the speech which he has just been making. If he has overlooked the question of accepting a loan from a corporation, it seems that he has overlooked it simply in drawing the amendment which he offers. Why did he not go to that extent? Why did he not say that a Member of Congress shall not buy a bushel of wheat of a corporation that sometimes engages in interstate commerce by sending their products that way? Why did he not cut them off from farmers, who buy and sell and engage in business, and say that a Member of Congress can not engage in business with any citizen of the United States? Why did he not go further and provide that a Congressman can not buy the necessities of life of these corporations and can not exist anywhere in the United States?

This is not simply politics. I made a little speech the other day on this bill in which I had not alluded to politics in any way, shape, or manner. I desired to go on with the bill, and I was accused straightway by the other side of introducing politics here. No politics have been introduced into this bill except by attempts coming from the other side. It is painful to think that Members who are here for the first time or the second time representing, say, some district in the State of Missouri, have found out that there is danger that the State of Missouri may align herself permanently on the Republican side, and when they come to realize that they think that they can not return here unless they get something demagogic in the way of amendment into this bill. And hence it is that we have these attempts made all along the line, and not on the merits of the proposition, not at all, but simply with the idea of catching some gudgeons who happen to vote somewhere in the United States. They are out-Heroding Herod in the number and multiplicity and the drasticness of these amendments.

Now, Mr. Chairman, both Houses of Congress considered the pass question in the last Congress. I think that there was no question that ever received so much attention from a conference committee as did that one. They brought in reports which were voted down in either House, and they went to work again and finally brought in a section which seemed to cut off passes in every direction, and that was promptly put into the Hepburn bill and became a part of the law of the land. And since that time I have not known of any man, and I have not suspected any man, of violating that section who happened to be a Member of Congress. And now they come in here and ask that Congressmen be separated from all of the people of the United States on the pass question, and under this drastic amendment which has been offered if he accepts a pass we can not trust him with the other people of the United States. They can not trust him with the ordinary citizen of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. They can not trust him with the editors and proprietors of newspapers or any other class of citizens, but he must be singled out and say that nothing will ever deter him from accepting passes unless there is a penalty clause added to a statute that not only fines him and imprisons him, but makes him infamous by the provision that hereafter he shall never hold any office of trust or emolument in the United States.

Why, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that such an amendment as that—I want to be parliamentary—if offered outside of this question, would be demagogy gone mad. Of course, offered here it is entitled to respectful consideration; but I insist that it is entitled to a negative vote from every man in this Chamber who has confidence in his own integrity and confidence generally in the integrity of the men who come here to represent the people in the various districts of the United States. I would like to get on with this bill; I would like to have it become law. Still, I will not deprecate those various amendments which are offered to these laws. The gentlemen who offer them possibly think they can get some advantages in their district, and, fearing a contest with the other party or some one within their own party, are bringing up amendments before this House for their district. I do not deprecate it, but I think we are spending altogether too much time, and we ought to have less talk and more votes and more progress with this bill. Then, if a gentleman thinks he has a grievance, if he really thinks that a Member of this House should be subjected to the infamous punishment which would attach to the bill, if he thinks that the general law affecting all the people of the United States is not drastic enough when complied with in reference to this law, let him present a bill and send it to a proper committee for them to bring in their reason why this should be applied to Members of Congress.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If I introduce a resolution in this House to have a nonpartisan committee, composed of Members appointed to investigate and find out how far this section is being violated, will you, as the leader on the other side of this House, favor it?

Mr. PAYNE. No; and I would not vote for it. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I will tell the gentleman why. We have the courts organized in this country for some purpose under the sun. If there is a violation of the law, the gentleman, not as a Member of this House, not as a Representative of a district in Texas, but as a citizen of the United States, has the right to go into the courts and make complaint—if he knows of any violation.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It is not a violation now.

Mr. PAYNE. If the giving of a pass is not a violation of the antipass law, I do not know what is a violation of law, I supposed we had provided for it. It is very plain. I do not believe the House of Representatives was ever intended to be a grand jury to go out and look into violations of a law of this kind. I think that the courts are properly constituted for that purpose, and we may safely trust the grand juries of the country, at least so far as I know them in my section of the country, on questions of this character. We have no use and we have not the time to take up in the House of Representatives, which costs $150 a minute, according to a statement made yesterday, on discussions of this character. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent that I be recognized for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, individually I always like to hear a lecture from the floor leader of the majority [Mr. PAYNE]. He has a perfect right to lecture his own side of the House, but he has no right whatever to lecture this side of the House. He seems to be disturbed because certain new Members from Missouri have participated in this debate. It is true that some of the new Missourians have spoken here, and they have spoken in such able manner as to please all who heard them. It is also true that many other new Members have made excellent speeches, on which I congratulate them most heartily. I wish to say that the new Member, the first termer, has as much right to express his opinion in this House as a gentleman who has been here as long as I have, or even as long as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has [applause]. What is more; I have undertaken to seek out the talent on this side of the House among new Members and I have insisted with them personally that they get into these debates and make their merits known; not only with new Members from Missouri, but new Members from everywhere else where I can get their ears. I am proud of the results of my suggestions in that regard. These new Members have justified my hopes.

I will state another fact to the gentleman from New York that may be of interest. Twice since I have been here, now thirteen years, I have seen Missouri have as high an average of talent in its delegation as any State in the Union, and it would have been so all the time if it had not been for two landslides. [Laughter and applause.] If these new Members from Missouri stay here a reasonable length of time, Missouri will again have one of the strongest delegations in this House, because I know every one of them, and know what they are worth. [Applause.] So much for that.

The gentleman seems to have felicitated himself with the delusion that there is some question as to how Missouri is going to vote in the coming election. I will give him some very valuable information on that subject suddenly. In the last Presidential election 75,000 Missouri Democrats stayed at home because they did not like a certain telegram sent from Esopus to the St. Louis convention. That is the plain English of it. They did not join the Republican party, because Roosevelt, although he carried the State by 25,000, received only 7,000 more votes in the State of Missouri than McKinley got in 1900, and that was not the natural increase of 275,000 Republican voters in the four years. These 75,000 stay-at-home Missouri Democrats are not dead. They have not moved away, and they will be first at the polls next November. The situation is that on the 8th day of July we intend to nominate William J. Bryan for President of the United States. [Prolonged applause.] And with Bryan as the Presidential candidate, Missouri is safe for 60,000 Democratic majority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have stated who our nominee is. I will risk my head on the proposition that there are not ten men on the other side of the big aisle who will dare to stand up here and say who they are for for President. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELL. I can tell the gentleman from Missouri who "the gentleman from Illinois" is for.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You are for Uncle JOE CANNON. I know who you are for.

Mr. BOUTELL. I am not only for Uncle JOE CANNON; I will go further. You may nominate Bryan in July, but we will elect CANNON in November. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are you dead certain that the Administration forces would be for your Uncle Joe?

Mr. BOUTELL. Every Republican in the United States will be for him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, do not you believe any such stuff as that. Were you at that Gridiron dinner down here when Roosevelt and FORAKER had that fuss? [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELL. That was simply one of those little ebullitions that will be entirely forgotten by November, and every Republican in the country will vote for the Republican nominee who is named in June.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you believe that men who were in the frame of mind that Roosevelt and FORAKER were that night would ever support each other for President of the United States?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They never will while the world stands.

Mr. BOUTELL. They will do it with pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have heard of that kind of pleasure before. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, we have had one lone fisherman [laughter], only one brave Republican soul, and so I will proceed.

Having disposed of the political phase of this situation, I want to make a few further remarks to several people here. In the first place, certain gentlemen have assumed a very peculiar attitude about this bill. I had intended to make these remarks some time before, but did not find it convenient to do it. The gentleman from New York says it is important that this bill be passed. I say so, too. Being a lawyer, and having had a good deal to do with criminal laws, I understand perfectly well that this codification ought to take place, and it ought to take place as speedily as possible. The statutes have not been revised for thirty-one years, and it is a tremendous job to find out what the law is. As a matter of fact, a man could never be certain that he did know what the law was. For instance, a man called it to my attention this morning where this committee, that has done an admirable piece of codifying (I will say that for them), had overlooked a subsequent statute in regard to a certain section reported in this bill. The position taken that we should not amend these laws seems to me to be untenable. It is the only opportunity we will have to amend these laws in ten or fifteen or twenty or thirty years, except by the process of introducing individual statutes here. Even if you get a favorable report from a committee, unless the Committee on Rules will intervene to take your bill out of its place on the Calendar and put it up at the top of the Calendar you do not have any chance to get your statutes passed. Personally I have a high regard for the members of the Joint Committee on the Codification of the Laws. They are not individually or collectively responsible for these laws. They discharged their duties by reporting to the Congress such laws touching criminal matters as they found on the statute books—merely that and nothing more. In no proper sense do they father these statutes, and they have no responsibility for them.

There may have been some politics talked over here, and perhaps some over there. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it does not hurt the Congress of the United States and it does not hurt the people of the United States to have a little politics talked sometimes, even here. There is not a man in this House who is not a politician. Thomas B. Reed, that masterful and brilliant man, said that the difference between a politician and a statesman is that a statesman is a politician who is dead; and I have this abiding faith about this House, and I am proud of it, while the talk goes on about the decadence of the House, that there are some of us here now, I do not know who we are, that are rated as politicians now who will be rated as statesmen by the men of the succeeding generations. That is the way it has run all the time, and we might as well practice ourselves in political thought and political speech a little occasionally. Some of these gentleman may have wasted a little time—I do not know whether they did or not—but I want to suggest this to the gentleman from New York, that there were three entire weeks wasted before the Christmas recess. If they had brought the President's message in here and made the usual motion that the gentleman from New York made in January, if that motion had been made in December, then all these gentlemen who want to make speeches and think they are under the necessity of making speeches could have made them on the President's message instead of making them on this bill.

But there must be some place in the workings of this House where a man can make a speech out of time and not germane to the subject under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the case, and everybody understands it. That is the reason for the rule that when the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider an appropriation bill you can speak on any question under heaven, providing you can get the time. You might as well quit kicking about amendments; some of them are valuable and some of them may be frivolous. That does not make a particle of difference. That will be the case no matter what law you are revising; each Member has his own ideas; many men of many minds.

We are going on and we are going to amend this bill. There is only one power in the Capitol that can keep us from amending the bill when we want to, and that is the Committee on Rules, backed up by the majority.

I am not in favor of squandering time, but while at it I am in favor of making the laws as we want them, and these men have the right to make speeches. It is a thing they have a right to argue about, because nearly all the men over here are practitioners of the law. I am not going to argue this amendment, either pro or con.

I will tell you what I believe about public men. I think they are more honest than they get credit for, to begin with. [Applause.] In the second place, I think that the man who holds a public office ought to be like Cæsar demanded his wife should be—absolutely above suspicion.

I will give you a sample of what I consider public honor. John Quincy Adams was one of the most disagreeable personages that ever sat in the White House, but he was thoroughly educated. He had an extremely delicate sense of honor, and I give him that credit and glory. When he was elected to the House after he was President he owned some stock in the old United States Bank, and he went immediately after his election and sold that stock, on the ground that there might be legislation involving the property of the United States Bank in Congress, and I commend his example to all of us. [Applause.]

While I am talking about John Quincy Adams I will tell you another thing that I commend. He is one of three or four United States Senators that ever had conscience enough, when he was instructed by the legislature of his State to vote in a way that he thought was improper, to resign his office and go home. That is to be commended in him, too.

Now, having cleared up these little matters, Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee very much for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to imitate the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in the matter of carefully avoiding a discussion of the amendment before the committee. I shall have occasion, probably, in the five minutes' time allotted to me, to call attention to the proposed amendment. Some have complained about politics in this House, and that we have not enough of them. We are trying, especially the gentleman from Missouri, to get back into that condition which led the late great Senator from Missouri, Thomas H. Benton, more than sixty years ago, in the Senate of the United States, to paraphrase that memorable exclamation of Madame Roland from the cart in which she was being taken to the guillotine to be beheaded, which was: "Oh, liberty, liberty, how many crimes have been committed in thy name!" Benton said it should be paraphrased thus: "Oh, politics, politics, how much bamboozling has been done in thy name!" [Laughter and applause.] Now, whether or not this is bamboozling in this amendment, I simply rise to say that I fear such proposed legislation will bring a scandal on the age in which we live. I am older than most of the people here, but it is my belief from experience that we are a better people to-day in all respects, in official character and otherwise, than any people that has ever existed in this land or in any other. [Applause.]

If we have been without such drastic statutes for one hundred and thirty years, we can get along better without them now than in the past. A few instances are attempted to be given by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], last upon the floor, intending to demonstrate that in earlier times we had better and purer statesmen. It would not do to rake through the embers of the past, or we might find that which would take away some of our veneration. You do not have to go but a few steps from the north end of this Capitol to see standing yet monuments of syndicates that were formed in the days of George Washington—and he was charged with being a party to them—to build up and get the best and most valuable property around the Capitol building. They failed like many others who go into syndicates; and some German fellows went down in the swamps along what is now Pennsylvania avenue and started to build the city, and started its growth westward, and it has been growing thence westward and northwestward ever since. I do not intend to go further into that. I do not believe in defaming my age and the people of this generation, as is so common by would-be assumed virtuous statesmen.

The Congressmen, I believe, of to-day average better intellectually and morally in all that goes to make up honesty than they ever did before. Why should we legislate as though we were all watching to take bribes? Why should we legislate in that way now? We ought to tear down our churches and schoolhouses and say that the Christian religion and common education are a failure in this country unless we have grown wiser and better. But enough of that. The draftsman of this amendment has been careful to designate certain corporations and firms that are not to give bribes to Members, and it is in line with other proposed legislation that certain corporations and firms shall not contribute to political campaigns; but if the amendment here pending and the other proposed amendments fall short of meeting the case, if the gentleman is afraid of a bribe coming to some brother Member—I will not say himself—let him broaden his amendment so that we shall not have these things come from the wealthy men—the individuals that are left out and were left out in the last national campaign and who were permitted to make large contributions to the Democratic campaign fund in 1904, and in other campaigns.

Why not make it a penitentiary offense to take from individuals the right to make political contributions and to take from the leader of the sugar trust and other wealthy individuals who advocated the election of Parker in 1904 their right to make such contributions, and make it a penal offense for them to make such contributions and for anybody to accept gifts from such as those? Why, it is reported that the man who was nominated on the ticket for Vice-President of the United States in 1904 was nominated because he would give $200,000 to that fund to carry on the campaign to elect the Democratic ticket.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; if I have any time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. You got your campaign fund from the insurance companies, I understand.

Mr. KEIFER. No; only partly. [Applause and laughter.] You got part of it, too; you got part of that yourself, so that in that we stand on a par.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I shall not ask any further time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has asked why we should pass legislation that reflects on the membership of this House. I never have believed that when you sent a bank examiner to a national bank to examine the affairs of that bank you reflected on the president or the officers of the bank. I never have believed that an honest man objected to having his books balanced, and it is only the man who fears discovery that is not willing to throw the light of day on all his transactions. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing new in this class of legislation. We have enacted laws prohibiting a Member of Congress from accepting a bribe, not because we believe the character of the average Member of Congress was such that he would accept the bribe, but it was to prevent the exception to the rule which occurs in all cases from having his vote improperly influenced in the House of Representatives. We have gone further than that. We are now putting laws on the statute books that prohibit a Member of this House from entering into a contract with the United States Government—not because it is a crime, but because the making of that contract may unduly influence his legislative mind. The mind and the will of the Representative in Congress should be solely for the interests of his constituency and the people of the United States, and it is no reflection on the membership of this House if you eliminate everything that might go to bias or influence that judgment. There are influences that may be brought to bear on a Member of Congress that involves moral turpitude. There are influences that may be brought to bear on a Member of Congress in which the idea of moral turpitude is entirely eliminated, but in some cases the influences that do not involve moral turpitude are more far-reaching, more dangerous, more effective to sway the action of this body from that which their constituency desires than influences that do involve moral turpitude.

Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of this House I have never known of a single Member of this House who sold his vote, who could be purchased on the floor of this House, or could be influenced, in my judgment, in a criminal or improper way; but, Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of this House I have heard it repeatedly stated on the floor of the House that gentlemen would support a bill because the Executive of this nation desired it. I remember that when the bill carrying the Porto Rican tariff provision was being discussed before this body that gentlemen rose in their seats and stated that although they were in favor of defeating the bill, were against its passage, believing that it was wrong to build a tariff wall between our people and the people of Porto Rico, still they rose in their seats and said they proposed to vote that way because the President of the United States had asked them to do so. Now, I say influences of that kind are just as dangerous and more dangerous to the membership of this body than influences that involve moral turpitude. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I do not arise with the hope of elucidating this question especially, but for the purpose of giving such encouragement to it as I can by offering it my humble support. I have resolved that I will never allow an opportunity to pass me by while I occupy the position of a representative of the people that I will not seek in every possible honorable way to prevent the representatives of the people in Congress from representing great corporations that they in their legislative capacity must have to deal with. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], in discussing this amendment, brought up the subject of free passes and said that the Congress passed a law to prevent the issuance of free passes to its Members as well as to other officers of the United States, but insisted that the Members of this body were too honorable to need this class of legislation. If that be true, I ask, Why did the Congress feel called upon to pass that kind of a law? Why were Representatives not exempted from the provisions of that bill if it was believed that no harm could come of allowing the railroads to continue the practice of filling the pockets of Representatives with free passes with intent to influence their votes in this House in their favor? I do not know of my own knowledge, gentlemen, whether a single Member of Congress was ever influenced by the free-pass habit or not, but I do know that when I first came to Congress there was a proposition carried regularly in every post-office appropriation bill giving to the Southern Railway, a great corporation, a hundred and forty-two thousand and some hundred dollars annually in addition to the amount it was entitled to under existing law, under the guise of special mail facilities for carrying mail from Washington to the city of Atlanta, Ga. I know, also, that there was an appropriation of $25,000 carried annually in the same bill under the guise of special mail facilities for a railroad running from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., and I know at that time that we had no law preventing Representatives from riding upon free passes three hundred and sixty-five days and nights of every year.

But, sirs, I know further that just as soon as this House passed a law preventing Representatives and Senators from riding upon free passes those provisions quickly disappeared and have not been seen or heard of since. Some of us had for several Congresses been doing all we could to defeat those propositions, but we could not bring about that happy result until after the antifree-pass provision had been incorporated into our laws. As soon as that was done more than $175,000 were saved to the American people annually by the defeat of those subsidy steals. Whether it was done because of the passage of the law preventing Representatives from riding upon free passes or not I do not know, but I do know that the appropriations were carried in the appropriation bill up to the time we were denied the right to ride upon them and have not been carried in it since that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRISCOLL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This amendment includes judges of the United States court as well as Congressmen. Now, if you are to purify the public service why should it not be extended to cover the Interstate Commerce Commission and all officers engaged in the execution of the railway rate law and include all men employed in the public service; why should you include the judges, unless you make it broad and comprehensive enough to cover all public servants?

Mr. MACON. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking him one in return. Does he favor doing what he has suggested?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I was asking the gentleman why he did not increase it. There are some things that I do not favor or in any way——

Mr. MACON. The gentleman will not answer the question, so I will proceed. I favor it and will vote for that kind of a law gladly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have always been in favor of a strict antipass law. I voted in favor of it.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I have referred to the antipass matter simply as an illustration of the necessity of throwing around the membership of this body some sort of a safeguard against undue influences that may be brought to bear upon them by great institutions that are powerful and able to control almost any human being on the face of the earth if they can get at him right.

We all know that when employed to represent clients as counsel that the facts when presented to us by our clients often have a different aspect to those that we understood to surround them before we were employed. I have heard a state of facts presented before I was employed to defend a client who had committed a crime, and I thought them heinous in their character, and that the individual ought to be spurned by all honest people; but when he and his friends came to my office and employed me to take charge of his case and told me the facts as they saw them, I viewed them in a different light. And all gentlemen who have represented clients have seen them in a different light also after they have been presented by their clients. I do not understand the mystic shift, but it occurs nevertheless. I therefore bring the matter before the House down to the particular question of the railroads influencing its Members. If a Member of the House is employed by a railroad at a salary of $25,000 per annum to represent it, not here particularly, but elsewhere, and the American people pay him only $7,500 for his services, I want to say that that Representative will be ordinarily found acting for the railroads upon all questions coming before the House where railroad interests are concerned, and he will not only resolve every reasonable doubt in favor of the railroads, but he will hunt up all of the captious and imaginary doubts that his mind is capable of devising and give them the benefit of each and every one of them. Human nature is human nature, Mr. Chairman, no matter where we find it, and we can not run entirely away from it, no matter how fleet of foot we are, and inasmuch as we are taught that it is only human to err, I suspicion that we ought to adopt this amendment in order to remove the human temptation to err as far from the people's servants as possible. To that end, sir, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that we ought to try to amend the criminal laws of the country in connection with this bill. This bill, as I understand it, is for the purpose of ascertaining and bringing together the laws of our country, which are now scattered through many books, buried amidst appropriation bills and other obsolete matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAULFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. How does the gentleman defend the action of the committee, then, in making 21 new sections?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I will answer the gentleman by saying this, that, so far as I am concerned, I do not think that the committee itself should have attempted to amend the penal code of our country in connection with this bill, but there is this to be said for the committee: That the committee has, at least, given the new sections it proposes full and fair consideration. I wish to say that the course of the minority as to these amendments amply verifies the wisdom of not attempting to create criminal law in this way. Gentlemen of the minority have risen and offered amendments to the preparation of which they have not given the time that as lawyers in their private practice they would have given to the drawing of a bill for the sale of a horse, and, then, gentlemen of the minority, on the call for tellers, have trooped from the cloakrooms and voted for these amendments without reading them and without even having heard them read. And yet they involved the liberty of citizens of the United States and ostensibly were intended to defend the people of this country against crime.

I say to you that the people of the United States do not want more criminal laws half as much as they want good criminal laws. To lack of consideration, lack of preparation of proposed legislation is due most so-called failures of justice.

The people of this country have enough half-baked legislation. If these gentlemen have amendments worthy of consideration, let them introduce them in the form of bills, and let them be considered in the proper way; but let us not attempt to amend the criminal law of our country by wholesale.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAULFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Are you in favor of a Member of Congress receiving any gift from a public-service corporation?

Mr. CAULFIELD. No; and I never rode on a pass or used a telegraph frank in my life.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Then you ought to vote for this amendment.

Mr. CAULFIELD. But I say this would be a bad precedent. If you adopt this amendment, then a troop of others will come; and I say to you that this is not the way to amend the criminal law of the country.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that the amendment is printed on page 800 of last Wednesday's RECORD, and each Member can find it there.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the objection that was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], it seems to me that the real reason why we ought to oppose this amendment is because it is practically covered by law at the present time. I was most heartily in favor of what is known as the antipass amendment to the Hepburn bill. I helped to draft the amendment to that bill before it left the House and before it went to the Senate; and when it was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee, after it had been prepared, I voted in favor of it and was consistently for that provision all the way through. But it seems to me now, since we have adopted a law that covers the case—a law that is adequate and complete, because no one claims that it has been violated—that the amendment now before the House has a tendency rather to make the subject ridiculous. But I was impressed at what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the present-day leader on that side of the House, said when he gave us an example of a man who sold his bank stock before he came to Congress and before he went to the Senate, and he commended that as conduct all of us should follow. Mr. Chairman, it seemed to me that the logical conclusion would lead to the adoption of an amendment which I have prepared and which I think covers the case. If a man can not be a banker and be elected to Congress, then he ought not to be a lawyer and be elected to Congress, and he ought not to be a farmer, because we may legislate on agricultural subjects; and he ought not to be a merchant, because we may legislate on the tariff or something that would affect his business.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Parcels post.

Mr. NORRIS (continuing). And the result would be that there are no people who ought to be elected to Congress except those who have no occupation whatever, who have no visible means of gaining a livelihood. It would affect the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] when he goes on the lecture platform. But in order to carry it out to its logical conclusion I have drafted an amendment which I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the proposed amendment the following:

"And any Member of Congress who shall engage in the practice of law, or who shall deliver Chautauqua lectures for pay, or who shall engage in farming or manufacturing, or who shall have any occupation whatever, or who shall patronize any national bank by depositing any money therein, or who shall patronize any railroad company by riding thereon, or who shall purchase any material of or sell any material to any corporation shall be hanged by the neck until dead and thereafter be prohibited from holding any office of profit or trust under the Government of the United States."

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that the gentleman from Nebraska should have turned that great reform that occurred here, and which the gentleman knows I had the honor of starting, regulating the "free pass abuse." The Republicans at first voted against the amendment I offered, which, changed some, was put on in the Senate; it came back and you were compelled to take your pill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Not all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman was for it, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] was another, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was another. All from the start. Now the gentleman has jumped the traces [laughter] and is trying to emasculate and to ridicule that law. The gentleman is trying to chloroform a great reform. Now, I ask the gentleman, if Congress were making a railroad regulation bill, does he think that only railroad lawyers should be elected to Congress to make it?

Mr. NORRIS. I answer emphatically, no.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then if a railroad lawyer is elected to Congress, do you think that railroad lawyer ought to vote against regulating his client?

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking him one.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. If a farmer, like my colleague here, is elected to Congress, ought he to be allowed to vote on any agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If he voted on a bill to put money in his own pocket or in his client's pocket that would not be proper.

Mr. NORRIS. Then that would exclude all of them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; a matter of general legislation is one thing and a matter of personal or private legislation is another thing. Let us leave the farmer. The farmer will take care of himself. Let us look at the lawyer. Do you think we should elect a Congress of lawyers to make railroad laws?

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Say yes or no.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to answer it in my own way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I asked you a question and you did not answer it at all.

Mr. NORRIS. I answered your question by asking you one.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; you did not answer it at all.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the election of lawyers to Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have not either. Otherwise neither one of us would be here.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Oh, I don't know about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. If the people of a district want to elect lawyers, that is their business, not mine. If they want to elect a farmer, that is all right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You are getting away from it.

Mr. NORRIS. Ask your question again.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think, if we were making a railroad-regulation law, we should elect only railroad lawyers to do it?

Mr. NORRIS. No; not by any means.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why?

Mr. NORRIS. Because we do not want to have any particular class elected, to the exclusion of all others.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. We ought to have farmers, lawyers, preachers, doctors, and merchants—all kinds of men in Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly; but when it affects their own pockets do you think they should even be allowed to vote?

Mr. NORRIS. If they have any interest in the result of the legislation, they ought not to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not mean a general interest.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care whether they are lawyers or whether they are farmers, the same thing is true.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So much for that.

Mr. NORRIS. Are you through with me now?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I never will get through with the gentleman, because I think he is a good lawmaker. The gentleman is frank and industrious and laborious; he is a good lawyer, and I think he is patriotic, but sometimes, like myself, he is wrong. He was wrong this morning.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I am on the floor I want to call a thing to the attention of this House that I think the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who is so learned and powerful in matters that he undertakes to call to the attention of this House——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, the gentleman well knows that one of the reasons why we passed the antifree-pass law was to stop Members of Congress and other Federal officers drawing their mileage and riding to Congress and to their posts of duty on free passes. Now I am told by the public press—and I take this from many papers—that a lot of railroad lawyers—I do not know whether in this House or in the other House—come here to attend the sessions of Congress on free passes, because they are railroad lawyers, when the law permits only railroad employees, which really means the man in the yard at work, the man who runs a train, and men of that kind.

Now, that lawyer, the public press says, is taking advantage of being a railroad lawyer, and therefore a railroad employee, and he comes to Congress in that way. If the gentleman had offered the amendment to stop that I would have gladly voted for it, but I shall gladly vote against the burlesque amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment for two reasons: First, because we are now in the business of revising and codifying the penal laws of the country and not of enacting new laws, and, second, because I do not like the amendment.

I am one of those Members of this House referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] who have always been in favor of a strong antipass law. According to my notion the practice by railroad companies of granting passes and annual transportations over their lines has been one of the most demoralizing influences in the public service, and the paragraph incorporated in the railway rate law passed in the last Congress forbidding the granting of passes to any persons except in the case of a few exceptions there specified was a wholesome and beneficial amendment to that law and can not fail to accomplish good results. But that law was general and included all people—Members of Congress, judges, and all others engaged in the public service and throughout the country, except those specially excepted. That law, if rigidly enforced, will accomplish the good results expected to flow from it. This amendment applies only to Members of Congress and to judges of the United States courts. I see no reason why it should apply to judges any more than to members of the Interstate Commerce Commission and all the men engaged in the execution of the railway rate law, and, for that matter, all officials employed in the public service.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] to this proposed amendment. In my judgment it is not fair even to all Members of Congress, and I will confine my remarks to one of the provisions in it. He says that a lawyer in vacation practices law——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not say vacation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am not alluding to the gentleman from Tennessee, but to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL]. I asked him during his remarks if a Member of this House who is a lawyer should render professional services during vacation for a firm or corporation engaged in the manufacture of goods which go into interstate commerce would he be liable to punishment under this proposed amendment, and he answered in the affirmative. Now, if the same lawyer practicing his profession during vacation should try a case or render other services against such firm or corporation, he would not be liable under this proposed amendment.

My friend from Texas is a good lawyer. He had a large practice, as I understand, before he came to Congress. He has not given it up, but during vacation, and occasionally during a session of Congress, he tries cases at home. I have no objection to that; but he generally tries cases against those corporation, firms, or individuals who are engaged in interstate commerce. Suppose he has a colleague from Texas who before he came to Congress defended those corporations, firms, or individuals who were engaged in the production or manufacture of goods which enter into interstate commerce. This amendment would permit him to try a case of negligence, an accident case, against a ranchman or producer of sugar, or a grower of tobacco or rice, whereas it would stop his colleague from defending those same parties in those same cases. That strikes me as unfair. It prevents his colleague from practicing his profession and defending his clients during vacation and receiving fees for the same, whereas it permits the gentleman offering the amendment to try cases against those firms, corporations, or individuals. His colleague from Texas has as much right to practice his profession during vacation as he has, and he should be permitted to do so without being liable to punishment by a penal statute. This proposed statute discriminates against one class of lawyers and in favor of another, and for that reason, if for no other, it should not be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY and Mr. RANDELL of Texas rose.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto cease in five minutes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion. I would like some time myself.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would amend that by making it ten minutes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I would like to have ten minutes to conclude the debate myself. There has been enough stated to require that time to answer it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, in order to accommodate the gentleman who has introduced the amendment, I will amend or modify the motion again so as to make it fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion will be modified and the question is, Shall the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in fifteen minutes?

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words upon this amendment. Sooner or later this country will come to the main gist of this question. For many years, in all the States and in Congress also, there was an agitation to prohibit giving free passes by the great transportation companies. Investigation of the subject took place and it was ascertained that railroad companies gave free passes not as a mere gratuity, without expectation of pay or reward, but with the confident counting on human nature that a favor extended would beget a favor in return. The legislation along that line was opposed, just as this legislation is opposed, by attempting to throw ridicule upon it, and by charging that the advocates of it were demagogues; but it did not avail to resist the tempest rising in the public mind, and last session this Congress passed a law forbidding the giving of free passes. You have a law now forbidding the gift of passes or any gift to Members of Congress in order to influence their action upon specific subjects, but it is hard to enforce it because you can not prove the intent.

The fact is, it is charged, and no doubt true, that in all the States of this Union members of State legislatures, of the house and the senate, and that Members of Congress are employed as attorneys by great corporations whose interests are commonly and constantly coming before those bodies for adjudication. The judge on the bench is disqualified if he holds the position of an attorney for a great corporation whose case is being tried before him. But the Member of Congress, in a position of more power to make the laws that influence or affect corporations, is allowed to be an attorney for those corporations. I know the gentleman speaks of a man representing a private citizen. It is a common principle of law that men representing the vast mass of the people are not disqualified because their interest is not specific and is too minute and remote. A judge upon the bench may try a case in which a community, he being one of the community, is interested. Every man is one of the whole people and in that way and to that degree is interested in every question of interest to the people, but that principle does not go to this proposition here. The great proposition is—and we will pass it some day if not now—that no man shall be allowed to hold a seat in this House or the other while he represents great corporate interests, whose rights, duties, and privileges are coming before him for adjudication and regulation by law. To-day we put a poor—I started to say one poor devil behind the bars because he practiced before a Department over which he had no power for a little pay, but that man might have received any amount of compensation from a corporation whose interests were involved where he could vote, and he is free from any crime. If a Member for pay goes before one of your Departments to advocate a small pension he is guilty of an offense. But he may represent a dozen public-service corporations as attorney and still vote on laws affecting them without guilt under our law. You can use your weapon or ridicule and you can use your argument of demagogy, but the people's reform goes on and the time must come when the people's representatives will not undertake to serve two masters.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the short time that we have to conclude debate on this amendment I ask the attention of every patriotic man on this floor. That ought to include everyone, and I hope it does. The amendment we are to vote on now is simply this: It says that a public-service corporation shall not make any gift to a Member of Congress or to a judge of the Federal court. Every one of you who is in favor of such a thing as that—in favor of receiving a gift, who thinks he ought to be permitted to receive it—should vote against this amendment; and I ask now if there is a man on that side of the House or on this side who really is in favor of having the privilege of receiving gifts from a public-service corporation while he is a Member of Congress, let him get up and show his face before these people and this House; let him have the manhood to stand up and say that he favors it. Not a one of you will do it. Every one of you will tell your constituents that you are not in favor of receiving gifts.

Then why not make it against the law? The chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee, the leader on that side of the House, got up and said that if my expressions were made anywhere else it would be the height of demagogy. He wanted to be parliamentary. Well, I could much more truthfully and properly say in reference to him—but I would not be so unkind as to do it—that his expressions anywhere else except in here would simply be the unmasking of graft; for there is no reason on earth, no logical reason, why public-service corporations should be allowed to go to a Member of Congress or judge of the Federal court with a gift, nor any reason why it should not be condemned by the law. Yet that learned gentleman, who has been here for more than twenty-two years as a Member of this House, actually says the way to do in reference to this matter is to go to the grand jury and have Members of Congress indicted if they are receiving gifts!

Why, it is not against the law; that is the reason we can not go to a grand jury. We are trying to make it against the law now. Then a violation could be prosecuted. Yet the leader of the Republican side, the man who brings politics into this thing—because the politics did not come from this side—he is the man that brings the politics into it in a way that is at least quasi personal, and he says that the way to do it is to go before a grand jury to stop Members of Congress from receiving gifts. I say, first make it against the law and then you can go to the grand jury, or you can have your own investigation; and I tell you now if you pass this amendment it will not be violated. The practice will be stopped. The Congress and the courts will be divorced from the trusts of this country—and you know it. Speaking politically, and keeping inside of the lines of truth as I see it, I say it will not only divorce the courts and Congress from the trusts, but it will put the Republican party out of power, because they are in power by the money of the trusts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Where is the man that will say if this was the law he would be in favor of repealing it?

If there is one in this Chamber, a single Member on the Republican side or elsewhere, who will rise up in his place and say that he will be in favor of repealing the law that denounced simply the giving of a gift to a Member of Congress and to a Federal judge by a public service corporation, let him stand up and say it. You would not tell your constituency about your conduct on this question. Do not talk to me about new Members coming here and trying to get off some of this demagoguery, some of these notions, in order to hold their places. I am a new Member in comparison with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], but I have been here for six years. He knows that the criticism that I am guilty of demagoguery is not seemly for him to make. My conduct has never justified such a charge or insinuation.

Now, I wish, as I said, to appeal to the patriotism of this House. I appeal from the partisanship of the leader of the Republican side; I appeal to Republicans, Members of Congress, to vote in accordance with what you will tell your constituents—that you are in favor of this measure. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] need not be afraid to vote for this amendment. It does not apply to any employment of an attorney or anything of that kind; that is the next amendment that comes up. This is 112a. This amendment means in substance, a Member of Congress shall not receive a gift. Why does he limit his argument simply to a pass? Why do you take away that privilege?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I asked the gentleman a question this morning, and did the gentleman not say it applied to an attorney trying a case?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is the second amendment. The two amendments are these: The first one is: You can not receive a gift from a public-service corporation. The second: You can not receive employment from them. It is against the law to take a bribe. The intent must be specifically shown to prove a bribe. There is no reason why a public-service corporation should give a Member anything, and when they do it the purpose is to bribe. Members of Congress do take these things. You know it, and I know it; why not prohibit the gifts, as well as prohibit the taking of a pass?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Whether it bribed him or not, does not a gift appeal to a man's sense of gratitude?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It appeals to his sense of honor when offered and he ought to reject it, and it ought to appeal to his sense of manhood, both ways—his honor to reject it, his gratitude if he receives it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does this apply to telegraph franks?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Yes. During your campaign you can not use the telegraph franks if this amendment becomes a law; you can not use the great public-service corporations, the railroads and telegraph companies, for your own interest politically and in business. You can not do it. You will have to pay your way. Let every man pay for what he gets. When they offer a gift to you they offer it as a general bribe. It is against the law to take a specific bribe. Why do you say you shall have the privilege of taking a general bribe? Whether it influences him or not, a man taking such a gift, saying it will not affect him, ought not to be a representative of the people. Let every man not only do what is right, but avoid the appearance of evil. Any man who will accept a position where, in the nature of the case, his honor will be questioned is not worthy of trust. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to say this: That without any regard to party I desire to have the vote taken and let every man register his vote as he believes the majority of the people in his district would wish him to do, not the interests, not the political leaders, not the political bosses, but the honest people if they were here to-day in these galleries and could look down and see our conduct and hear this debate, could see your vote, and see the record of it. Vote as you would then; vote in accordance with their will. Your position here does not belong to you. You are the servants of the people. I call upon you to-day to vote not as demagogues, not as grafters, but as men worthy to represent the citizenship of the United States in the legislative halls of Congress. Vote the will of the people who sent you here, whose servants you are. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Continued applause.]

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided and there were—ayes 80, noes 60.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. RANDELL of Texas to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers announced—ayes 88, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee arose on Thursday last another amendment, which had been read by unanimous consent for the information of the committee, and offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] was pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 112b. That it shall be unlawful for any Senator or Representative in the Congress of the United States during his term of service, or for any such Senator or Representative elect to directly or indirectly hold or take any office, employment, or service, or to receive any salary, fee, or pay as officer, agent, representative, or attorney from any national bank, railroad company, or ship, express, telegraph, telephone, or sleeping-car company, or any public-service corporation, or any corporation chartered by an act of Congress of the United States, or any firm, company, or corporation organized or conducted in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, or that is charged with or has been convicted of a violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States, or any corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, traffic, or business, or commerce or business between any Territories, or any State or Territory, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory of the United States or any foreign power, or any person, firm, or corporation interested in legislation or other business of Congress, existing or anticipated.

That any Senator or Representative in Congress violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 and by imprisonment of not less than one month nor more than one year, and shall forever be barred from holding any office of honor or trust under the Government of the United States.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] is recognized.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is the second amendment. It simply says, in express terms, that a Member of Congress shall not receive employment by any public-service corporation. It seems to me, without taking up the time of this committee, it ought to be apparent to everyone that there is a party spirit here, there is an effort made to hold conditions as they are at present by appealing to party power. From the Speaker of this House himself to the humblest follower on the Republican side they rally to the party lash of the floor leader; they vote solidly without a dissenting vote on that side, so far as I saw and believe—and I was one of the tellers—including the highest official and the lowliest follower, against this legislation. On that side everybody can be brought in to vote against a proposition that says you shall not receive gifts from the public-service corporations. The Republicans voted solidly against my amendment. The votes for it were all Democratic. I have reason to believe that the general impression in the country is—and the charge has been made in the newspapers—that the Congress of the United States is honeycombed with the employees of public-service corporations, with those who are working for the trusts. It seems to me that there must be some grounds for those statements.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I can not do so now. However, if they will see that my time is extended I will answer any question asked by any gentleman on that side. I do not mean to cut gentlemen off from questions if they will see that my time is extended so that I can answer them. When I get through with my five minutes, if the gentlemen will see that my time is extended, I will answer questions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Members of Congress are in the employment of public-service corporations, how are you going to stop it? What plan do you propose to stop that practice? If we offer a bill your committee will not report it, and if we offer an amendment here you vote it down. You say such employment does not exist, but if we offer a resolution to inquire into the employment of gentlemen of this House you say that you will vote that down. You will not permit the question to come up. How, then, will you reach the evil? Suppose, as has been said, that this amendment would have interfered with the employment of from three-fourths to seven-eighths of the Members on that side of the House during the Fifty-ninth Congress, how will you reach the evil? Is it not a fact that you are trying to protect the evil? Is it not a fact that you propose that the evil shall not be reached? If you are going to reach it, how are you going to reach it? Are you in favor of public-service corporations employing Members of Congress and paying them salaries? Are you in favor of it? Then say so and tell your constituents that and you will not come back to this House. But you tell your constituents that you are for the people and against Members taking pay and gifts from corporations, and yet you come here and vote for the public-service corporations, as you have done to-day. I am here to lecture no man, but when the leader on the other side of this House speaks about legislation like this as demagogical it is time he should be answered in the proper spirit. The demagoguery is on that side of the House and the graft is on that side of the House. The proposed remedy is on this side of the House and the opposition to it is on that. A solid Democratic vote for this legislation and a solid Republican vote against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. KIMBALL. From Kentucky. I have not to be shown.

Apropos of this discussion, permit me to suggest that after service of nearly sixteen years in this House the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, leader of the minority, was to-day elected a Senator of the United States by the legislature of the State of Mississippi. [Loud general applause.]

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Texas a question simply. I did not wish to interrupt him in his own time under the five-minute rule. In both of these amendments appears the language "or any corporation chartered by an act of Congress of the United States." Since the first discussion this morning I have heard quite a little talk among Members privately as to whether or not in their opinion that applied to national banks, and there was quite a division of opinion on the subject. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether it was his intention that that language should apply to national banks or to corporations organized in pursuance of an act of Congress?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Why, I intended the amendment just as it reads. I would have included national banks in actual words, but I wanted to get some votes on that side. I do not believe a national-bank attorney has any business in Congress.

Mr. BOUTELL. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that I was asking him this question in perfectly good faith.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I answer in good faith.

Mr. BOUTELL (continuing). Not as expressing any doubt as to the gentleman's opinion. The language is "any corporation chartered by an act of Congress." Now, as we all know, national banks are organized under general law, by applying through the Comptroller of the Currency, and the thought that occurred to me was that if there was such a difference of opinion whether or not this did apply to national banks, it was simply an illustration of the great care with which we ought to legislate on matters of this importance.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Does the gentleman think that ambiguous, and would leave out national banks? I left it out because I thought I would get some votes on that side of the House by doing so.

Mr. BOUTELL. I fail to follow the reasoning of the gentleman from Texas on the last feature. My opinion is it would not include national banks as it is now.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is my opinion.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this amendment includes the same principles as that just voted down, and I call for a vote.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a few words.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois asked a pertinent question of the gentleman from Texas; and if the committee will indulge me for a moment, I will try to elucidate the question somewhat. I will state in just a moment that one of the judges in the State of Texas was held to be ineligible, or had no right to try a case against a bank in which he had stock. That was a judicial decision. Now, here I find that the matter was raised in this shape on May 10, 1830, the question being on a motion to lay on the table resolutions relating to the renewal of the charter of the Bank of the United States. Messrs. William Drayton, of South Carolina, and Campbell P. White, of New York, were severally excused from voting on the question because they were interested as stockholders in the Bank of the United States.

Now, then, in another place I find where WILLIAM P. FRYE, now a Senator from the State of Maine, having stock in the Pacific Railroad—I think it was the Pacific Railroad—is reported as having asked the question whether or not he had the right to vote, and the Speaker read Rule XXIX:

No Member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately or particularly interested.

Having read the rule, it is for the gentleman himself to determine whether he shall vote, not for the Chair.

Mr. FRYE declined to vote.

Here is the John Quincy Adams incident, where he declined to vote in a matter not relating to banks; but there is the well-known case to which I alluded a few days ago, where Mr. Adams, I believe, sold his bank stock before he took the oath of office. I have not had the time to run down the exact history of that, but that is my general recollection. But here is a case where he refused to vote where he was interested in the matter under consideration.

Now, going a little further on, in 1874 the House was considering the bill (H. R. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes; and Messrs. Poland, of Vermont, and Hamilton and Phelps, of New Jersey, were officers of national banks and therefore not entitled to vote on the pending questions, which included the following propositions. I ask you to pay special attention to this proposition. It is almost an every-day proposition. Here is what they declined to vote on:

That, in lieu of the tax of 1 per cent per annum now imposed by law on the outstanding circulation of national banks, a tax of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually in gold, shall be payable on the circulation which has been issued to each national bank which has not been returned for cancellation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me read you the Jeffersonian rule, and I ask the committee to listen particularly, because the wording of the Jeffersonian rule, I will say to my friend from Texas, is different from the wording of the rule under which this House is operating. Here is the Jeffersonian rule:

Where the private interests of a Member are concerned in a bill or question he is to withdraw, and where such an interest has appeared his voice has been disallowed, even after a division. In a case so contrary not only to the laws of decency, but to the fundamental principle of the social compact, which denies to any man to be a judge in his own cause, it is for the honor of the House that this rule of immemorial observance should be strictly adhered to.

Now, here is the present rule, Mr. Chairman:

Every Member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sitting unless excused or necessarily prevented—and shall vote on each question put unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Now, it seems that these parliamentary decisions of recent years leave it with the Member to say whether or not he shall vote, but the Jeffersonian rule says that decency and the social compact demand that he be silent and that the right and dignity of this House shall silence his vote in such a matter.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the resolution of the gentleman from Texas, the wording of which I have not been able to carry exactly in my mind, is more like the Jeffersonian rule than the rule of the present House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHERMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 300) providing for second homestead entries, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. NEWLANDS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CODIFICATION OF PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support the amendment now pending and offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Section 112 as reported by the Committee on Codification and Revision of Laws aims at the crime of bribery of a Member of Congress, Resident Commissioner, etc. It provides, among other things, that if any Member of or Delegate in Congress or Resident Commissioner asks, accepts, or receives any money or anything of value with a view of influencing his vote, action, or decision, upon any matter which may at the time be pending before him, or in either House of Congress, or before any committee thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than three times the amount asked or received, and imprisoned not more than three years, and thereafter be forever barred from holding any office under the Government of the United States. This section is right as far as it goes, but in my judgment it does not go far enough in its scope or tenor. One of the cardinal principles which guide courts in the construction of penal statutes is never to construe the statute broader than its meaning as expressed by its plain provisions and wording therein. If a crime has been committed and the statute is not broad enough to cover the offense, the guilty must go acquit upon the ground that there is no statute in existence defining the offense and we are then told by courts that in such cases our remedy is to appeal to the legislature and procure the passage of a statute covering the defect in the case.

I feel sure that no member of the committee would oppose the amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas, nor do I believe that any Member of this House would oppose or vote against either one of these amendments if they were offered as original independent legislation. To read the amendment is to approve every letter, word, sentence, and paragraph.

His first amendment, section 112a, makes it unlawful for any railroad company, or other corporation organized under a law passed by Congress, or any other corporation engaged in interstate commerce, to give to any Member of Congress, or to any judge or justice of the United States, free transportation for himself and property, providing a penalty therefor of a fine against such corporation of not less than $100, nor more than $5,000. And the section further provides that if any officer in any such corporation violates this section of the statute he shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not less than six months nor more than two years in the penitentiary. The section further provides that if any Member of or Delegate in Congress, or any United States judge or justice, shall receive pay from any railroad, or other corporations engaged in interstate commerce, he shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000, or by imprisonment of not more than one year in the penitentiary.

Section 112b makes it a crime punished by a fine and imprisonment for any Member of Congress, while serving as such, to take, hold, or accept employment from any national bank, railroad, or other public-service corporation engaged in Interstate Commerce, or commerce between the States, or commerce between the Territories, or commerce between the States and the District of Columbia, or other Territories, or for accepting employment from any corporation doing business in violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States, or any corporation that has been convicted of violating the anti-trust laws of the United States. Both of these sections as offered by the gentleman from Texas appeal to the moral conscience of every patriotic man in all the country. Submit these amendments to the people and they would adopt them by a unanimous vote. This is a deliberative body of men here assembled for the purpose of making laws, not only to govern themselves, but all the people throughout the country, and as such we should not hesitate to do our plain, positive duty. The bill under consideration contains 337 sections and this does not by any means cover the entire criminal code of the United States. Upon a reading of the bill under consideration it looks like it contains a section against every conceivable crime that could be committed against the Government, yet until this time, nor do I believe there can be found anything in any section of the bill now under consideration that reaches the offenses set forth in the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas. Why oppose them or either of them? Is it because they ought not to be law? No. Or is it because it would be wrong for this Committee of the Whole House to accept the two amendments under consideration? Would this be a rebuke, or a turning down of the Committee on Codification or Revision of the Laws? No. To adopt the amendments would not be a rebuke, nor would it be a turn down of the committee who reported to the house the bill under consideration. The first part of the amendment, section 112a, imposes a penalty upon the corporation violating any of the provisions of the proposed amendment. The second part of the same amendment imposes a penalty upon the officers of all corporations who violate any of the provisions of the proposed amendment. I somtimes doubt the wisdom and propriety of imposing a fine upon corporations who violate the law. Corporations are only creatures of the law and as such can only act by means of boards of directors, officers, or agents selected by the corporation to conduct its business. Some one, some flesh and blood must always put the machinery of the corporation in motion. Without this it would always remain a harmless entity.

As an illustration, take the immense fine of $29,240,000 imposed by a Federal court last summer upon the Standard Oil Company; in my judgment, this enormous fine imposed upon the corporation did not have its desired or intended effect. This immense fine fell primarily upon the shoulders of many a stockholder in this corporation who knew nothing about the violation of the antitrust law that was then or had been going on by a few officers of this corporation for years prior to this time. If instead of imposing a fine upon the corporation itself, a penitentiary, or even a jail, sentence had been imposed upon some of the officers of the corporation the conviction, in my judgment, would have had its desired effect. One of the primary objects of conviction is not only to punish the real criminal, but it is to terrorize others and prevent them from doing likewise. I do not wish to be heard as saying that I oppose the fine imposed upon this corporation, but on the contrary I heartily approve of it. While this temporarily depleted the revenues of the corporation, yet by simply raising the price of oil to the consumer, how long did it take for this corporation to recover back the full amount of the fine, even though it had paid the same? Not so with a penitentiary or jail sentence. This would make men who serve as the directors or agents of great corporations not only fear, but respect the law. It would likewise make them respect not only the rights of their fellow-man, but the rights of the Government. Therefore if it be the desire to stop this nefarious practice on the part of corporations, impose a heavy penalty upon the officer or agent of the corporation who has personally violated the law. A fine upon the corporation only depletes the funds of the corporation and often fall upon victims and persons who are innocent of either moral or intentional guilt. The board of directors, officers, or agents of a corporation who gives any money or anything of value to any Member of or Delegate in Congress is guilty of at least two moral offenses. First, for betraying the trust imposed in him by the corporation; second, in corrupting some officer of the United States. Observation teaches us that corporations ordinarily do not contribute a loan for charitable purposes. Contributions of any kind made by corporations to Members of or Delegates in Congress are designed by the corporation to bring manifold fruit back to the corporation in the way of fruitful legislation desired by the corporations. Therefore, why hesitate to impose a dire penalty upon any officer of any corporation who undertakes, either directly or indirectly, by gift of money or other thing of value, to influence any Member or Delegate of Congress or to anyone whose duty it is to construe the laws passed by Congress.

These two proposed amendments can not be characterized by anyone as being buncombe. They represent real, living, vital issues now before the American people. Corporations, as well as individuals, have their own rights that ought to be protected every time they are in the right. But when the corporations, or more especially its officers or agents, overstep the boundary line between right on one side and wrong on the other, it, or its officers or agents, has then transcended its rights and made itself or its officers amenable to the law. The part of the section of the statute making it a misdemeanor for Members of Congress to receive pay from any railroad or other corporation engaged in interstate commerce is especially commendable.

Again, corporations giving to Members of Congress free transportation do not give it without entertaining some hope of reward in return. I do not say, nor do I intimate, that any Member of Congress accepting any free transportation from any corporation engaged in interstate commerce, that this would be the means of influencing his action, judgment, decision, or vote upon any matter pending before him, or pending in Congress, or before any committee thereof. Yet, the human mind is at all times susceptible, more or less, of influence either for good or evil, and when these gifts are freely bestowed upon Members of Congress by corporations engaged in interstate commerce it may possibly have the effect of influencing some Member of Congress to vote, or influence his action, judgment, or decision upon any matter which might be pending before him. So far as possible a Member of Congress should be absolutely free and untrammeled, so that he may at all times act upon the consciousness of his own judgment and conviction. And if he does this, while his action may be criticised by his constituency or by the public in general, yet he will have the self-consciousness, at all times, that he did his duty as justice dictated to him that he should.

The provisions set forth in the proposed amendments of section 112b are, in my judgment, of much more importance and of far more reaching consequence than the provisions in section 112a. We are told by divine writ that we can not serve two masters at once, and serve them consistently with our duty. Render unto God that which belongs to Him and unto Cæsar that which belongs to him, was the judgment of the Great Judge who lived upon the earth nineteen hundred years ago. This same decree comes to us to-day with as much binding force as it had upon the people of that day. We are not hired agents of our districts alone, but we are supposed to be the agents and representatives of all the people throughout the United States. This section of the statute makes it a penal offense for any Member of Congress, while acting as such Member, to take or accept employment from any national bank, or from any other corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or from any corporation engaged in interstate commerce, or from any corporation that has heretofore been convicted of violating any of the antitrust laws of the United States.

No one can successfully condemn this proposed amendment. It ought to be the law and ought to be so conceded to be the law by every thinking man who gives it one moment's thought, more especially in this day, when the question of controlling the great industrial corporations of the United States in some way or manner by legislation enacted by Congress is up for discussion, not only here, but by the people at large. No man can successfully represent the people in this Congress in the making of laws and at the same time be the hired attorney of some corporation organized under the laws of the United States or some corporation engaged in interstate commerce. Congress has a right to at all times control corporations established under the laws of the United States; and while the corporation thus established on the one hand and the United States on the other may clash in interest, the Representative in Congress, who is supposed to look after the interest of the public, in such cases ought to act with that degree of freedom of spirit and independence that would enable him to do his duty, regardless of friend or foe. One of the sacred principles upon which all governments rest is confidence on the part of the people in their government, that everyone is going to have a square deal. If this confidence is once shaken or destroyed, the principle upon which our entire social and political fabric is founded becomes shattered and destroyed.

We legislate against others committing crimes against the Government; why not us legislate against ourselves? We should shun and avoid the very appearance of evil. This provision of the statute, if enacted into law, will, in my judgment, convince the people that this Congress, or all future Congresses, so long as this statute remains upon the books, desires to avoid the appearance of evil, and desires to stand for that pure legislation which will ultimately restore complete confidence in the masses of the people in their Government. We are confronted to-day with economic questions growing out of our peculiar industrial situation that only a few years ago were absolutely unheard of. Some industrial corporations have grown to such magnitude and strength that the States find themselves unable to cope with the situation. These corporations must of necessity have a master somewhere, and the only source of power to which we can turn to govern and control them is the Government of the United States. A hired attorney of the great industrial corporation engaged in interstate commerce could not feel himself free to act while attempting to enact laws to govern and control these institutions. Therefore I sincerely believe that the two amendments proposed embody such vital principles of law as would redound to the credit and good of the country at large. I sincerely hope that either the Committee on the Codification of Laws will accept them, or that the Committee of the Whole House will enact them into a statute, so that ever after no corporation, its officers, or agents will undertake to pollute and corrupt, either directly or indirectly, any Member of this House, or any judge or justice of the United States. And also that no Member of either branch of Congress, while serving as such, will accept employment from any master other than that to which he has been lawfully elected, the sovereign vote of his people.

We were told a little while ago by the gentleman from New York that politics on our side had been injected into this bill. A reading of the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas absolutely refute the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. There is no politics involved in the amendment now under consideration. However, if it takes an injection of politics into a discussion of bills or amendments thereto pending in the House before we can procure just, wise, and much-needed legislation, I for one am perfectly willing that politics be injected into the discussion. Section 111 of this same bill makes it a penal offense, punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, for any Member of this House, except in the prosecution of his duty, to prosecute a claim against the United States or to receive any interest in any claim against the United States as a reward for his service. Is there any politics involved in this section of the statute? The answer to it is palpably plain: None whatever. It is indeed an extremely valuable section to the penal code of the United States. It completely divorces Members of Congress from prosecuting any claims against the United States for a fee or reward. Under the same rule Members of Congress should, in my judgment, while serving as a Member of Congress, be absolutely prohibited from serving either as a director, agent, officer, or attorney of any corporation organized by means of a Federal statute or any other corporation doing an interstate business. Congress has power by means of law to charter corporations, and by means of the Constitution has the power to regulate interstate commerce. Therefore by this means Congress has the power to govern and control corporations engaged in interstate commerce. Whether it is right for Congress to govern and control corporations engaged in interstate commerce is indeed quite another thing. If Members of Congress are prohibited from prosecuting claims against the United States, except in the discharge of their duties, for a fee or reward, upon the same principle, in my judgment, Members of Congress while serving as such should be prohibited from accepting employment from any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or from any other corporation over which Congress may by its constitutional power assume control.

Again, section 120 of this bill makes it a penal offense for any Member of Congress to solicit or receive any assessment or contribution of money for any political purpose whatever. Section 121 makes it a penal offense for anyone in any building, or in any navy-yard, etc., to solicit in any manner contribution for campaign funds. Section 122 makes it a penal offense for any employee of the United States to promote or degrade any employee of the Government who neglects or refuses to make any contribution for campaign purpose. Section 123 makes it a penal offense for any person in the service of the United States to give or hand to any Member of Congress any money for the promotion of any political object whatever. Here are four distinct sections of the bill under consideration imposing a severe penalty for the doing of certain things which, in my judgment, are of far less importance than the things enumerated and attempted to be prohibited by the amendments now under consideration. Let us as Representatives in Congress, representing as we do more than eighty millions of free men and women, do our duty by writing these amendments upon our statutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto terminate in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] because it is right in spirit if it is not perfect in its draft. I hope the House will give a favorable vote for its adoption; but, Mr. Chairman, I rise now for the purpose of answering a part of the argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. He insisted that Members of Congress were like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion, and therefore there was no necessity for the enactment of a law to prevent them from serving two masters. I want to say in answer to that suggestion that if reports are true the gentleman from New York knows very well that a certain gentleman who is now an ex-Congressman violated the law of the land while a Member of this House and escaped punishment therefor by pleading the statute of limitations. He knows that a certain ex-Senator from a great Western State violated the laws of his country while a member of the United States Senate and escaped punishment by entering the same plea. He knows that another ex-Senator violated the laws while a member of the Senate from another Western State and served his time in the penitentiary therefor. He knows that another Senator after thirty long years of service was indicted and convicted for violating the laws of his country and died between the court-house and the penitentiary. He knows that Congressmen are human beings, that they are subject to temptations just like all other men, and if he seeks by his talk and by his vote to quiet that feeling that causes some of us to believe that laws ought to be passed that would prohibit Members from serving two masters, when they are elected by the people for the sole purpose of serving them, he is badly mistaken in the material that he is working on.

As to what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] stated this morning when he asked the gentleman from Texas the question, that if his amendment prohibited farmers from employing counsel, I want to insist that there is no interest of the farmers from one end of this country to the other that is in any sense inimical to the best and highest interests of the National Government. Their interests never conflict with any of the interests of the Government; they support the Government. Everybody knows that there is no necessity for a law to prevent farmers from employing counsel.

They never undertake to prostitute the laws of their country or corrupt its Representatives. For that reason the insinuation that the gentleman made that the farmers might be prohibited from employing counsel is entirely foreign to the question that is now being considered by the House.

Mr. DENBY. May I ask the gentleman whether he does not recognize that the farmer is engaged in interstate commerce and that farmers may be associated together in business constituting a firm, and therefore under the wording of the bill the farmer could not employ a lawyer who happened to be a Member of Congress?

Mr. MACON. I recognize the fact that the farmer is not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. DENBY. Is not?

Mr. MACON. I recognize the fact that he is engaged in producing all that the gentleman eats or wears.

Mr. DENBY. And shipping it from State to State.

Mr. MACON. And that the great corporations of the country are doing the interstate part of the transaction and not the farmer. Let the farmer alone, for he will never do our country any greater injury than to feed, clothe, and defend it in time of war as well as in times of peace.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDELL of Texas) there were—ayes 56, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Thursday, by unanimous consent an amendment was pending and postponed until the next session of the committee, offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after section 119 the following:

"SEC. 119a. Every officer and employee of the United States and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government who shall, by virtue of the office or position held by him, become possessed of any information which might exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product of the soil grown within the United States, which information is required by law or under the rules and practices of any Department of the Government to be withheld from publication until a fixed time, who shall willfully impart, either directly or indirectly, said information, or any part thereof, to any person not entitled under the law or rules and practices of the Department of the Government to receive same, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than ten years and may be fined in any sum not to exceed $10,000.

"SEC. 119b. Every officer of the United States and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of any Department or office of the Government who shall, by virtue of the office or position held by him, become possessed of any information which might exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product of the soil grown within the United States, who shall, before said information is made public through regular official channels, either directly or indirectly, speculate in said product, by selling or buying same in any quantity, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 and may be imprisoned for not more than ten years."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as a substitute to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas the following, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after section 119 the following:

"SEC. 119a. Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or a person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office thereof, and while holding such office, employment, or position shall, by virtue of the office, employment, or position held by him, become possessed of any information which might exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product of the soil grown within the United States, which information is by law or by the rules and practices of the Department or office required to be withheld from publication until a fixed time, and shall willfully impart, directly or indirectly, such information, or any part thereof, to any person not entitled under the law or the rules and practices of the Department or office to receive the same; or shall, before such information is made public through regular official channels, directly or indirectly speculate in any such product respecting which he has thus become possessed of such information, by buying or selling the same in any quantity, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by myself as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas makes no change in substance, but does make some slight change in form. The effect is simply to consolidate the two sections into one and to put them in such phraseology as to be in keeping with similar sections now in the bill reported by the committee. The explanation made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] when the matter was up some time ago perhaps makes unnecessary much of a statement by myself. The act is aimed to punish those in official positions whose duties enable them to obtain information relative to crop statistics, who give this information to others prior to its being made public in accordance with law. There have been grave abuses in the past by virtue of the action of men in the employ of certain Departments of the Government whose duty it was to protect the information respecting the various crops, as, for instance, the cotton crop, and who, prior to the giving out of that information publicly, gave it to certain parties for speculative purposes, and the matter reached the point of a considerable scandal. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] introduced into the last Congress a bill seeking to cure this trouble, and it passed the House of Representatives. It also passed, as I understand it, the Senate of the United States, but in that body there were certain verbal changes made which threw the matter into conference. In conference the committee on conference enlarged the bill very greatly in scope. When it came back to the House it was defeated as presented by the conference committee. The amendment now pending is confined to matters relative to the product of the soil, and is not made to extend to information further than that, I believe it is in line with legislation——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, right there I would like to inquire whether, as I hear the amendment read, it would subject a Member of Congress or other officer of the United States to heavy fines for violating a rule of a Department, with which rule the officer might not be at all familiar or have any means of knowledge.

Mr. PAYNE. Not only the rules, but the practices of the Department.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not by the remotest construction. I believe an examination of the act will show that it is expressly limited to those persons holding such office, employment, or position as shall by virtue of the office, employment, or position held by him, become possessed of any information which might exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product of the soil grown within the United States, which information is by law or by the rules or practices in the office required to be withheld from publication until a fixed time. Now, it applies to those employees and officers of the Government in a department where the rules of that department with which they are bound to be familiar, require that this information shall not be given publication until a fixed time—now, if these persons give out this information they shall be punished, and, manifestly, they ought to be punished.

Mr. OLMSTED. But, if I heard the reading of the first part, it applies to a great many more than the employees of the department. It applies to any officer of the Government——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLMSTED. Any officer of the Government, for instance the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, might come into posession of some information of that kind by virtue of his position. He would not know the practice of the Department or rules of the Department, and yet if he gave it out in a public report to the House of Representatives, he would be subject to a $10,000 fine.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not believe the criticism offered by the gentleman is a proper one to the amendment as drawn. I do not believe any judge undertaking to construe it according to the plain language used could possibly hold it applied to the case the gentleman has stated.

Mr. OLMSTED. I brought it to the attention of the gentleman, so that if he thought it necessary he might amend it accordingly.

Mr. SHERLEY. My idea is the law is properly safeguarded by the language used to prevent it reaching that class of cases.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. With the gentleman's permission. I listened to the reading of his substitute and I got the impression that it confined offenses to information given out by an officer or employee while he is in the Government service. Now, suppose a man connected with the crop-estimate service gets full information respecting conditions and resigns, as he might well afford to do if the information is of such a character as to affect the market, and after resigning he sells the information to speculators, under your substitute he could not be punished, because it requires information to be given out while the offender is in office.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true, and I do not know whether you could reach the case of a man who, having resigned his office, gives such information out. Certainly our desire in offering the amendment was to narrow it. The gentleman's complaint is just the opposite to that suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. His criticism is that it is too broad. Yours is that it is not broad enough.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not broad enough to accomplish what the gentleman hopes to accomplish. I do not believe in the amendment, because I think it is too vague and uncertain. I think among other vicious features that is one. I think the law that makes it a crime for any employee of the Government who receives information respecting crop estimates or statistics, in virtue of his office, place, or employment, to give out such information at any time before it is legal to publish it, or by order of the head of the Department, ought to be punished, but we do not need this kind of a law to do that. A law that involves so much of speculation and uncertainty as is embodied in this amendment I do not think wise, and I think the amendment does not accomplish what gentlemen intend it shall, because a man may get information and resign his office, give up his job, give this information out, and make thousands of dollars on the stock exchange without fear of punishment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman that it does not embrace the case of a man who has resigned, and if the Committee of the Whole desires to make it that much broader they can, though there is some question in my mind whether you can; but I have no objection. The other criticism I do not think is well taken. I do not think that the fears that have been suggested in regard to this act reaching out and bringing within its terms Members of Congress and men who in perfect good faith might state some fact that might prove of value to a man who would be able to apply it to existing market conditions are well founded. The amendment is aimed at a very serious evil and it is in practically the language that had been adopted by the Commission when it was contemplated to put it in the revision, but the committee, following the narrow line of not bringing in new matter, concluded not to report the recommendation of the Commission, but it has occurred to me, after the statement made by the gentleman from Texas, that the matter has been sufficiently considered by the House to warrant its consideration here and insertion in this penal code.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have been listening to the gentleman, and I want to ask why its application is confined to products of the soil. If it is a good thing, why not apply it to other things?

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps the real reason is that previously it has not been so confined as desired by certain Members, and it was with the hope of avoiding such opposition that it is now narrowed. Another answer, and perhaps a more proper one, is that the abuses so far that have arisen—that have given cause to the need of such a law—have been abuses growing out of the divulgence of information relating to the products of the soil.

Mr. DRISCOLL. May there not much difficulty arise in the construction of what is directly or indirectly "products of the soil."

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. I think it is possible for gentlemen to suggest imaginary troubles in connection with that. That is true of anything, but I suggest to the gentleman that "products of the soil" is certainly a definite enough statement to be properly interpreted by the court.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that one vital feature of this bill—it seems to me sufficient to defeat it as a criminal statute—is that the character of the information disclosed must be such as tends to influence the market. Who knows? Who is the judge? How can any man tell what information may influence markets? The gentleman is a good lawyer and a good legislator and duly appreciates the fact that in criminal statutes it is highly important to state the crime clearly and explicitly, so that an ordinary man can read the statute and know what is forbidden by it. Here is an element of conjecture and speculation. One may in conversation with a friend incidentally give casual information that he does not dream will influence or tend to influence markets. Is he a criminal? Must he give it knowing it is of such nature that it will influence markets? Is he to be the judge, or shall the court and jury determine those questions? That element of uncertainty ought never to go into any penal statute.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman that, so far as possible, there ought to be eliminated any matter that is open to construction, and if it were possible to the amendment to suggest language that would clearly indicate it better than that which has been used, I would be more than willing to have it done. But I suggest also to the gentleman that I believe it is an ascertainable fact by a jury in the trial of an indictment under this section to determine whether the information was such as might exert an influence upon or affect the market value of a product of the soil. The amendment is aimed at those officials in the Government who become possessed of certain statistical information in regard to the crops growing in the country and who, by having that information prior to the public, are in a position to judge of the market price of a given crop, and all of those facts being set out, as they would have to be, in detail, in an indictment, would present such a case as, in my judgment, would enable, under proper instructions, a court and jury to determine the offense.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That might be true in relation to a court and jury, but the accused ought to know in advance, and he ought to have an opportunity to know whether the information that he gives out is criminal information.

Mr. SHERLEY. The accused, who in this case must be an employee in a Department whose duty it is to get this information, does know and must of necessity know that he should not divulge any of the information.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, the gentleman is getting on the right theory. If the bill were prepared prohibiting, as I said a moment ago, the divulging of any information in respect to estimates or statistics in relation to crops, growing or matured, until they had been made public by law or the head of the Department, it would be a specific penal statute, so that everybody would know what was meant by it, and it would reach the identical question that is intended to be reached by this amendment—by this speculative proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will bear with me, the accused in order to be convicted under this statute must have become possessed of this information by virtue of the office, employment, or position held by him, and that narrows it to just the idea the gentleman suggests. If he gets this information through an official capacity, and then in violation of his duty gives it out to certain parties for their special benefit, he becomes liable, and there will be no uncertainty in the mind of any honest employee of the Government whether or not he is violating the provision of this act. It would simply impose upon them the secrecy until publication that was intended when Congress provided for the gathering of statistics.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I trust there will be no partisan feeling in regard to a question of this kind. This amendment in my judgment should pass this House. It should be a part of this law. What harm can there be in passing this amendment, whereby an officer who is supposed to be in possession of these estimates shall be fined if he imparts any information concerning the wheat crop, the cotton crop, the corn crop, or any crop that the soil may produce? You all know that if information of this kind is imparted to anyone, it is given out absolutely to the speculator, to the direct loss of the producer.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Suppose the information tends to show a shortage of the crop, and it booms the price. The producer who has his product on hand gets the benefit, does he not?

Mr. GRONNA. It makes no difference.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may operate either way.

Mr. GRONNA. It does not make any difference whether it booms the price or not, we should provide that information of this kind should not be imparted. We should go further than that, and as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] said a moment ago, the officer should be prohibited from making any estimate. Not only should he be prohibited from giving out information, but he should be prohibited from making estimates, unless he had good and sufficient reason to suppose that his information was correct. Now, I for one shall vote for this amendment, and I sincerely hope that it will not be made a partisan question.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky

[Mr. SHERLEY] has correctly stated the course that this matter took in the previous Congress. I think this is to be said: That although the bill then pending passed the Judiciary Committees of the House and the Senate, and although it passed both the House and the Senate unanimously without debate, that when the attention of the House was squarely brought to the matters involved in the bill the House by a very decisive vote, nearly two to one, upon a roll call, voted against it, so that what the committees of previous Congresses did should not have any weight in view of the fact that their action was so decisively set aside by the House after a very full debate. Now I want to say in justice to this proposition that it is very different from the proposition that was reported by the Judiciary Committees in the last Congress and that was voted down by the House of Representatives. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has pretty nearly limited it to the exact evil that he wants to meet. My objection to the previous bill was a fundamental objection. The Government of the United States rests upon publicity. The people should be encouraged to know everything possible concerning their Government. There should be no law framed which by any ambiguity would make it a crime for any officer of the Government to tell the people anything he knew about what the Government was doing unless a very grave reason of state existed; and when the House had its attention called to that aspect of the case it very decisively voted the bill down. There should be no confidential statistics, no confidential information, made so by law in a Government like ours, unless that confidential information is very strictly and carefully defined by the law. We should rather favor taking the lid off than putting it on. While we may pass bills here making it improper for a Member of Congress to do this or not, we only impair our own freedom of private action, and when a given matter is brought within the scope of the law we should proceed with caution and be careful not to do things which by a stretch of the law might come within the things prohibited; but when we say that an officer of the Government shall not give certain governmental information, then we should be very cautious in our definition, so that the officer should know what he is prohibited from. In any case of doubt he would solve the question in favor of his own freedom and thus general terms and doubtful construction would operate against that publicity so salutary in a Government like ours.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not a fact that there is a certain time when these officers give this information?

Mr. McCALL. That may apply to the specific question; I have been talking about the general proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. I should like to have another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCALL. So that my objection to the previous bill was that the information which the officer was prohibited from giving out should be clearly defined, and it was not clearly defined. We know a man who is at the head of a Department of the Government and his representatives and subordinates are continually approached by members of the press. They are probed for news to give to the people; and sometimes one of these officers may be indiscreet and tell something he should not tell. I do not think he should be punished for an indiscretion merely, which, although it is an indiscretion, will in some cases do more good than harm. But what I desire to make emphatic is the necessity of caution in formulating a penal statute against any officer giving information.

Now, the evil the gentleman has aimed at is an evil that exists and that should be dealt with. We require by law that certain information be collected concerning the growing crops—cotton and other crops.

Mr. BURLESON. Wheat and corn.

Mr. McCALL. Wheat and corn. The gentleman from Texas simply wishes to deal with that subject-matter. This bill seems to me to be so drawn that it is limited to that subject-matter. If it came up as a new proposition here, and not as a part of the revision of the penal laws, I should have no objection to the gentleman's proposition, and should vote for it if it were clearly expressed.

I confess I have not, although I have had an opportunity to do so, studied the amendment with any particular care. I do not know whether it would prohibit the giving of information upon a call, for instance, by the House of Representatives, because this amendment is protecting that information by a statute, and, of course, a resolution of the House of Representatives could not set aside a statute and free an officer from his obligations under it.

It seems to me that the gentleman can bring this before the Judiciary Committee and if its phraseology is approved that he can get it through the House unanimously; but it touches a very important subject-matter, and it seems to me that we should be very certain that it covers just the point that the gentleman from Texas wants to cover, and that there is no redundancy or pleonasm, such as are used in indictments, that will cause it to reach cases that we do not want to reach at all.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, there is just one feature of this amendment that presents a very serious aspect to me. As I understand it, the crime here depends not upon the giving out of certain information, but upon the violation of a rule or practice of a Department. Now, who makes the rule that furnishes the basis of this criminal act? Is it the legislative branch of the Government, or is it the head of an Executive Department? If it is not the legislative branch, then I ask by what right and under what rule can the authority be delegated to any one other branch of the United States Government? Can we, even if we wish, forego our own functions and delegate them to others?

Let us assume that a committee of this House were appointed for the specific purpose of ascertaining information regarding certain matters in the Department of Agriculture, and every man on that committee is acting by virtue of his office and in pursuance of his official duties, and, while acting in that capacity, one of them ascertains certain facts or procures certain information; and on the following day very properly and in accord with the view of every Member of this House and of every member of the Senate of the United States, he should see fit to give out that information to the general public. There would be no disagreement whatever among the members of the legislative branch of the Government as to whether it constituted an offense or not. But let us presume that during the night the head of that particular Department from which that information were received should frame some regulation or promulgate some rule which made the giving out of that information an offense. The giving out of the information by the Representative, because it violated the rule so laid down by that Department head, would constitute a criminal offense, according to this amendment. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that under the circumstances, as this amendment clearly delegates legislative power to an executive officer, it would, for that reason alone, invalidate the statute if it were adopted here.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the gentleman understands that no regulation made by a department could be valid unless made in pursuance of law. The gentleman will further understand, because he has read the amendment offered, that the officers and employees affected are those who in the department, by virtue of a duty, obtain this information, and there would not be the slightest danger of such officer violating a regulation of his own department, under which he was working and obtaining this information unconsciously. If he violated a proper regulation, made in pursuance of law, there is no doubt as to our power to punish. The question has been adjudicated, and there is a line of cases which establish that principle. The gentleman understands that Congress frequently passes a law giving to a department certain duties and powers, but can not and does not undertake to provide every detail, but leaves the details to be the result of proper regulation. Now, I agree with the gentleman that there is considerable to be said against the theory of making the violation of a regulation an offense; but when the violation is of a regulation pertaining to the very duties of the man who commits the offense, it does not seem to me that the same weight can be attached to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following:

"Provided, That no person shall be deemed guilty of a violation of any rule or practice of any Department unless prior to such alleged violation he shall have been furnished with a duly authenticated written or printed statement of such rule or practice."

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word respecting the attitude of the committee on this proposed section now before the House, and to explain that it occupies a very different position from the new sections previously objected to by the committee. This particular section of law was reported by the Revision Commission favorably, and now exists as a part of the report of the Commission and appears in that report as section 8669. In the first revision bill that was introduced in Congress, and referred to the House Committee on the Revision of Laws, this section of law was carried. It had been reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee; it had once passed the House and Senate, but when our committee came to consider it as a part of the bill they found that by subsequent action the House had refused to enact it into law, and this action of the House was regarded by your committee as a mandate not to carry it in its bill. I remember at the time that it was considered in the committee, the very eloquent argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] was read and the action of the House in rejecting it was reviewed. And for that reason alone your committee did not report the section in the present bill, but the section was before the committee for its consideration and was recommended by the Revision Commission whose work this committee was called upon to review, and it is clear therefore that the consideration of this proposed amendment stands upon an entirely different plane before the House than the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] and which was opposed by the committee upon the ground that the provisions included in those amendments were absolutely new law that had never been passed upon by a committee of the House or recommended by the Commission.

In the present consideration of the new section we assume no position as a committee as to its advisability or its necessity, but I make this statement in order to make clear the distinction between it and the other amendments opposed by us.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to state in how many places in this codification and revision of the penal code a violation of a rule of a Department is made a criminal offense?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I am not able, Mr. Chairman, to state accurately, but it was our purpose, and I remember one instance at least, where we refused to report a section that made a violation of a regulation a criminal offense. I will say that such provision occurs in very few instances.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know that there are any?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are a few instances growing out of regulations of the War Department and, I think, some in regard to the regulations touching mines and matters of that kind. I think that is the case, but I am not positive.

Mr. MANN. There was a recent decision of the Supreme Court relating to this matter in some way, but I am not familiar with that decision.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I think that decision said that a regulation must be made in pursuance of law, otherwise a violation would not be a criminal offense. I will state, in elucidation of what was said by the gentleman from Kentucky in reference to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois, that this committee, acting upon the section, No. 48, I think, respecting the regulation referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky, a provision making it a crime to violate a regulation of the War Department respecting the trespassing upon a torpedo or mine field, the committee struck that out—that portion of the law respecting the regulation of the Department—and reported to the House the section omitting that provision, upon the ground that we did not regard it salutary or safe to make the violation of a regulation of a Department a criminal offense.

Mr. MANN. I understand the specific matter that this amendment seeks to get at is the giving out of crop-report information, and this would make it a criminal offense to violate a rule or practice of the Agricultural Department. Would that be any offense under the decision of the court unless the Agricultural Department be authorized by law to make that regulation or rule?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; absolutely not.

Mr. MANN. Is the Agricultural Department authorized by law to make any rules and regulations in such a matter?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes; I think I can say that the Department is so authorized, but I have not the section before me.

Mr. MANN. What I want is the information as to whether this proposition, if adopted, will have any effect? Is there any authority of law given to the Agricultural Department, or the Secretary of Agriculture, to make regulations upon this subject? Is there any provision of law upon the subject except the mere appropriation carried year after year in the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. While I have not the section of law relating to it before me, yet I have a distinct impression that the Agricultural Department has the power to make such regulations, but if it has not, nobody could be convicted under this section.

Mr. MANN. While I directed my question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], I was shooting past the gentleman from Pennsylvania, hoping that the author of the amendment would be able to give us the information.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, I will not stand in the way of the author of the amendment giving the gentleman that information.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I have in mind, I think, the purpose of the pending amendment, the abuse that it is designed to correct. Several years ago an employee in the Department of Agriculture was charged in the public press with having given out to speculators on the stock exchange information, coming to that office officially, respecting estimates of the cotton crop. It was charged that that officer of the Government took the information to speculators and profited largely thereby. It was discovered that there was no statute, no law under which he could be prosecuted for violation of any public duty. Personally, I have no objection at all to a law; not only have I no objection, but I believe a proper law ought to be enacted to protect the public against that kind of abuse.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In a moment. I think the law ought to be definite and specific. It is a subject that can be clearly stated in a bill. There is no need of embodying in the law elements of conjecture or speculation or metaphysics, such as are in a way in this provision, such as ought to have no place in any penal law. There are a number of provisions in this amendment that I think are objectionable, that violate the principles, the very fundamental principles, of criminal legislation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell the committee what became of the Holmes case that arose out of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe it was ascertained that there was no statute under which Holmes could be prosecuted, and it is the object, I understand, of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], whom we think to be the author of this amendment, and who introduced a bill in the last Congress upon this subject and came very near getting it through, to provide a way of reaching that class of offenses, but I think his provision is not apt at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will not the gentleman, who is confessedly a good lawyer, give us an amendment to the gentleman's amendment that will cover that outrageous practice?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That same thing was suggested in the discussion of substantially this bill when it came up in the last Congress. The bill had gotten to the last stage of consideration and the House voted down the report of the conferees, and then on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] tabled the whole proposition. It was suggested then that all that was necessary was to make it a crime for any officer or employee of the Government to give out to anybody any information respecting crop estimates or statistics until they have been made public either by law or by authority of the head of the Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know of any law governing the Department down there that makes it a crime or a punishable act to make a corrupt calculation as to crops?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not know. If there is any such practice, it ought to be punished.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is a most outrageous case that I know of where there was a corrupt calculation as to the tobacco crop, where they made it much larger than it was and published it, and therefore to the detriment of the grower.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the phraseology of this amendment. It does not make it a crime to give out information respecting crop statistics or estimates that may have been gathered officially by any Department, but it makes it a crime to give out information which might exert an influence or affect the market value of any product of the soil. There is the element of speculation, of conjecture. I say that no man in America can read that provision and know what he can do and what he can not do and not become a criminal. No man, I repeat, no lawyer is able or acute enough to give trustworthy and reliable information in the interpretation of that statute to anyone so as to protect him against prosecution under it. I say let it be declared a crime to give out information respecting estimates and crop statistics that are gathered offically by any Department of the Government until they have been made public by law or by authority of the Department and you have covered the exact question in language so plain that nobody who can read can misunderstand the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, in relation to the question of predicating a crime upon rules and regulations, I think the amendment is also objectionable. I do not have in mind—and I confess that I have not in mind all of the statutes governing the action of the Department of Agriculture—any statute authorizing the Department of Agriculture to make crop estimates and to publish rules and regulations outside, possibly, of the appropriation acts.

I do not believe they convey in express terms any authority for the Department to make rules and regulations, but as a matter of necessity in doing the work the Department is, of course, compelled to adopt certain practices and regulations in its administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is a general statute that gives the heads of all Departments authority to make regulations in furtherance of law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That may be true. Those are administrative regulations and they are only for the purpose of carrying out the detail work of administration, and I do not believe there is a single instance in all this country where a regulation under that general authority has been recognized as a valid basis for a penal prosecution——

Mr. SHERLEY. There are many decisions under the internal revenue and probably as many under customs.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course there may be numerous decisions under the internal-revenue law, but none that the courts of the country have held valid, excepting where the particular law authorized the making of regulations and those regulations limited only to the carrying out of the purpose and spirit of the law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is not that this amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does not this create an offense and authorize regulations for the purpose of taking care of the details?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; the matter of regulation is altogether a collateral proposition. The amendment creates an offense based upon practices that may exist in a certain Department. That is the proposition.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman think an offense can be made by regulation of an act which is not made an offense by statute?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; a criminal offense can not be predicated upon a regulation.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is it not the gentleman's contention that unless the act is made a criminal offense by statute, notwithstanding the Department may have the right to make regulations, it can not base a substantive offense upon a regulation?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the law as declared by the courts, and the gentleman has well stated it, that the Congress must determine what act shall constitute crime and fix the penalty, and in that connection Congress may provide for administrative purposes, may make certain regulations that will elaborate, amplify, or administer the provisions in detail of that law. For instance, Congress may provide that it would be a crime to counterfeit any certificate that an executive officer is required to make by the law. Now, the executive officer requires a certain certificate to carry into effect a certain law in which Congress creates a crime and imposes a penalty by the statute itself, and that is a pretty fair illustration of the kind of regulation that may be made the basis of a penal offense and that only. Now, here the crime is the matter of a regulation only. It may be a crime to-day to do a thing and the next day it may be an innocent act altogether, depending upon the regulations made by our Department of Agriculture, for instance. These crimes are based in a large degree altogether upon regulations, and all the members of this committee will admit that is not a scientific way, at least, of making penal laws. The Constitution vests in the Congress the legislating power. It does not permit Congress to delegate that power or responsibility to any administrative department, and therefore I think there are two serious objections to this bill that might easily be remedied and a very simple provision substituted, reaching the evil that is desired to be remedied, to be clear of all elements of speculation and conjecture and be free from all these matters of regulation and practice. I am against the bill. I am against any criminal law drawn in such fashion as this, however serious the evil may be that is sought to be corrected.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, while on the subject of defining crimes by rules and regulations of a Department I want to say a few words. I have not made a careful investigation of the decisions of the courts to ascertain the power and authority of the Departments to make rules and regulations which may constitute crime, but it has always been my understanding that a Department could not make a crime out of an act which was not made a crime by a statute. And on referring to one case in the Supreme Court of the United States, which I sent for a moment ago, my original opinion has been confirmed, as I read the case, at least. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the case of The United States v. Eaton, in 144 Report of the United States Supreme Court, commencing at page 677. I desire to call attention to a few quotations from that decision.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman before reading the quotation state the actual facts so that we will know just what the court decided?

Mr. BONYNGE. This was under the oleomargarine act. I will read the syllabus of the case, which states very briefly the facts, as follows:

A regulation made August 25, 1866, by the Commissioners of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, under section 20 of the act of August 2, 1886, (c. 840, 24 Stat., 209) in relation to oleomargarine, required wholesale dealers therein to keep a book and make a monthly return, showing certain prescribed matters. A wholesale dealer in the article who fails to comply with such regulation is not liable to the penalty imposed by section 18 of the act, because he does not omit or fail to do a thing required by law in the carrying on or conducting of his business.

There are no common-law offenses against the United States.

It is necessary that a sufficient statutory authority should exist for declaring any act or omission a criminal offense; and the statutory authority in the present case was not sufficient.

Now, I think I will show not only that there was not a statutory authority for making the act an offense, but that the court held further that unless the offense was created by the statute and not by the act it could not be an offense.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not by the regulation.

Mr. BONYNGE. Not by the regulation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think there is any dispute in regard to that. No one, as I know of, contends that a Department can create a crime.

Mr BONYNGE. But I understood the gentleman's position to be that if the law gave to a Department the power to make a regulation, and a regulation was made in pursuance of law, that even though the violation of that regulation was not by the act itself made an offense, it could be made so by the regulation.

Mr. SHERLEY. My position was this, and I think I could find the gentleman some cases if I had the time for a moment's research, that Congress can make it a crime to violate a law and regulations made in pursuance of that law, and that Congress has done it, and that men have been convicted under such a law.

Mr. BONYNGE. I would like the gentleman to produce the authority, because the position I take is this, that unless the statute itself makes the act a criminal offense, the Department can not by a regulation make the act a criminal offense.

Mr. OLMSTED. Suppose this act makes it a criminal offense to violate that regulation. Then you have an act of Congress, have you not?

Mr. BONYNGE. No, I do not think you have the act of Congress making the offense a criminal offense, unless in specific terms the statute has made that act a criminal offense. Let me call your attention to what the court said:

It is a principle of criminal law—

I cite from the opinion of the court—that an offense which may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it.

Quoting from the American and English Enclycopedia of Law.

Now, I ask the gentlemen to note that language, that "it is a principle of criminal law that an offense that may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed or omitted in violation—" Of what? In violation of a regulation made in pursuance of an act of Congress? Not at all, but "in violation of public law, either forbidding or commanding it."

Let me call attention to this further language——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BONYNGE. Quoting now from the concluding language of the court in this case:

Regulations prescribed by the President and by the heads of Departments under authority granted by Congress—

Which is the question the gentleman submitted to me—

may be regulations prescribed by law.

And nobody doubts that there may be lawful acts done under them and in accordance with them, and may thus have in a proper sense the force of law, but it does not follow that a thing required by them, which is the regulation, is a thing so required by law as to make the neglect to do the thing a criminal offense in a citizen where a statute does not distinctly make the neglected thing a criminal offense.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will bear with me; that was a case where the penal law simply provided for a violation of law and did not go further, and did not provide that it was a penal offense to violate the law or any regulation made in pursuance thereof. Of course it is manifest that no Department can make a penal statute, but it is quite competent that Congress shall declare what the offense and penalty is and shall say that a violation of the law and the regulation made in pursuance of that law shall be so punished.

Mr. BONYNGE. Your proposition necessarily goes to this conclusion—that we can delegate to a Department the right to designate what acts shall constitute a crime. While the regulations may be made in pursuance of law, we can not say that any act is made a part of a criminal statute itself by being a violation of the regulation made in pursuance of a statute. Would you confer upon the Department authority to say what acts shall constitute a criminal offense?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. But we do confer upon the Departments, in pursuance of law, the carrying out of a great many details. And we have declared a violation of the regulations a crime. The gentleman will find on examination a great many cases—I know in internal revenue I can find a number of cases of that kind.

Mr. BONYNGE. I hope the gentleman will produce some of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you know of any act passed under which they made the regulations whereby they issue orders from the Post-Office Department prohibiting people from the use of the mail?

Mr. BONYNGE. But there is nothing criminal in that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but I know it has absolutely ruined a good many men.

Mr. BONYNGE. But we are talking about the power of the Department to create a criminal offense by regulation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it not inflict punishment?

Mr. BONYNGE. Not criminal punishment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not practical punishment in the nature of a crime?

Mr. BONYNGE. It inflicts damage, but it does not make a criminal offense punishable by indictment in a criminal court. That is what we are talking about.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Under that regulation that they made down there they can bankrupt any house in the country; and they have done it repeatedly.

Mr. BONYNGE. But at the same time the Department does not undertake to say that the act is criminal. The Department may in such cases cause damage, but the question we are discussing is the power of a Department to make an act criminal which is not so made by a statute.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado has referred to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Eaton case, based upon section 18 of the oleomargarine law. Those laws did permit the Secretary of Agriculture to make regulations, but did not specify the regulations and did not specify any penalty for a violation of those regulations. That is the point I tried to bring out. Section 18, which was referred to in the syllabus of the court, and read by my friend from Colorado, reads thus:

That if any manufacturer of oleomargarine, any dealer therein, or any importer or exporter shall knowingly and willfully omit, neglect, or refuse to cause to be done any of the things required by law in the carrying on of his business, then he shall be subject to a fine of $1,000.

There was no penalty provided for any violation of the regulations of the Department, but only for refusing to do things required by the act of Congress itself. There was no act of Congress providing any penalty or making it unlawful to fail to comply with the departmental regulations. Of course there could be no fine imposed under such circumstances. But here, by this amendment, if it shall be agreed to and become law, we will have a distinct and definite statutory declaration that any violation of the rule of the Department upon the subject under consideration shall constitute a violation of the law and be punishable by the fine specified.

The chairman of the committee having the bill in charge [Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania] concedes that the adoption of this or some other similar amendment will not be a violation of the principle which has guided his committee in conducting this bill through the Committee of the Whole. He has recognized the importance of some provision upon this subject. This, while not perfect, seems to me to be the best that has been offered.

My objection to it in its present form is that it would permit a man possibly to be convicted of the offense of violating a regulation of which regulation he had no knowledge. Now, if I understand the situation, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] is willing to accept the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and also the amendment which I offered to that substitute, providing that there shall be no conviction unless the party charged shall, prior to the commission of the offense, have been furnished with a copy of the regulations, so that he knew what it was that he was violating. With that amendment, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to ask my colleague a question. Why is it necessary, in order to meet the condition described here, to have all this verbiage? Why not omit these words—which information is required by law or under the rules or practices of any Department of the Government to be withheld from publication until a fixed time.

Why can you not define it by striking out those words? Why can you not thus in precise terms define the offense and then provide the punishment?

Mr. OLMSTED. It might be more clearly or concisely defined, but nobody seems to have offered an amendment to bring about that result, and the one offered seems to be the nearest thing to it.

Mr. BUTLER. May I be recognized until I can put the same question to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. In answer to the question, I think that goes to the gravamen of the offense; and if you undertake to strike that out, you have emasculated the statute.

Now, the gentleman will find that theoretically it is very easy to suggest that you can condense this statute. I have condensed the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas into about half its original size; but if you go beyond that, you get to the point where you are creating no offense at all.

Mr. MCCALL. I should like to ask the gentleman if striking those words out would not put the ban of secrecy forever upon this information, so they could never give it out?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will think a moment, I think he will see that instead of making the law more clear, it would either make it very much more uncertain, or would, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], prohibit forever the making public of the information.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the purpose here? It is to punish some one who violates a particular duty imposed upon him. I understand that it is the duty of some of the officers of the Agricultural Department to gather news concerning the condition of the crops, and among those the cotton crop.

Mr. BURLESON. And the wheat crop.

Mr. BUTLER. And the wheat crop and the corn crop. It is a very important duty, requiring a very high order of man, because the information he gathers he should keep to himself. Why not prescribe some punishment if he imparts that information, unless it is imparted in a certain way that Congress shall direct? Why not define the act specifically? Why leave it to the regulation of a Department? Do you not intend to punish the man who gives away this secret?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. BUTLER. Of course I will permit the gentleman. I want to be informed.

Mr. SHERLEY. When you are aiming at an evil of this kind, it is never as wise to enumerate some particular offense as it is by broad terms to deal with such offense and those of like character, and that we have done. We have used language properly worded, so as not to make it too broad, and yet comprehensive enough to embrace those cases we want. The gentleman's plan would necessitate the enumeration of those cases that happened to occur to him or to somebody else, and then about a year afterwards we should discover that some case that did not occur either to him or to the rest of us was the case to which we needed the law to apply.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe the purpose of the act is to punish the person who discloses this information. Am I correct in this conclusion?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Then why do you not provide a punishment for the man who discloses the information?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we have.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not say that the man who discloses the information gathered in this way shall be deemed guilty of some offense?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we have said so.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think so.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BUTLER. In my judgment, you leave it to some Department officer to determine what particular act shall be punished.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman must know that we can not undertake to incorporate in this act all the regulations. And right upon that point, to show that it is nothing unusual, I would like to read the syllabus of a case which settles the legality of the proceeding and shows that it is not new. I read from the syllabus of the case of Dastervignes et al. v. United States, 122 Federal Reporter, page 30. It says:

The provision of the sundry civil appropriation act of June 4, 1897, relating to forest reservations (30 Stat., 35 U. S. Comp. St., 1901, p. 1540), which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to "make such rules and regulations and to establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservations, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction," and which itself prescribes the penalty for violation of such regulations, is not unconstitutional as delegating legislative power to an administrative officer, but is a valid delegation of power to make administrative regulations in relation to details necessary to carry out the purpose of the act.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman state what court that was?

Mr. SHERLEY. The circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit.

Mr. BONYNGE. My understanding is—I am not certain about it—but my recollection is that there are different opinions in different circuits on that very proposition that you have now called attention to. Has the gentleman any case from the Supreme Court of the United States that goes to that extent?

Mr. SHERLEY. I know, if the gentleman from Colorado will permit me, that there are such cases, for I have read them. Of course I have not had the opportunity since this point was raised to examine them, but the distinction the gentleman fails to recognize is this: That Congress has to establish the offense and has to fix the penalty, but that Congress can say that the offense shall consist of the violation of the law and the regulations made in pursuance thereof. What Congress could not do would be to pass a law saying that the Department might make the regulations and might declare the violation of them a crime.

Mr. BONYNGE. Was not that what was done in the case that the gentleman has read from?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; that is a case like what is attempted to be done here. Congress said it shall be a crime to violate a specific law and regulations made in pursuance thereof. The distinction between that and the Department making a regulation and then declaring that the violation shall be a crime is the difference between constitutionality and unconstitutionality.

Mr. BONYNGE. My recollection was that the offense was created by the regulation.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the offense is created by saying that it shall be an offense to violate the law and the regulations made in pursuance thereof.

Mr. DALZELL. The only difference is this: In the original act Congress prescribed the penalty, and in this case Congress by another act, which it can do just as well afterwards, prescribed the penalty.

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely. In other words, there have been repeated instances where Congress says it shall be a crime to violate a law and the regulations made in pursuance thereof. It is not a delegation of power to a Department to create a crime. It is permitting the Department to settle the details and work out the general law the violation of which Congress has declared shall be a crime.

Mr. McCALL. What does the gentleman have to say about the provision regarding the practice of the Department? How can it be determined what the practice is?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think if the word "practice" is given any meaning, it would have to be given the meaning of "regulation," and I am perfectly willing to eliminate it. I think the gentleman's suggestion that the word "practice" ought to go out is a good one, and, with the consent of the committee, I will move to strike out the word "practices" wherever it appears in the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out from the amendment offered by me the words "and practices" wherever they occur.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by striking out the words "and practices" wherever they appear in the amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to strike out the same words wherever they appear in my amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his amendment may be modified in the same way. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I now ask this question for information: Suppose, for instance, this amendment be adopted by Congress and it go into the law immediately, and suppose in the spring the Department of Agriculture is collecting statistics as to the wheat crop and there is some regulation that it shall not be published or disclosed until the 1st of July, and then that some man in the Department who is familiar with the facts does disclose those facts. What is he guilty of, or is he guilty of anything at all?

Mr. SHERLEY. He is guilty under this statute and is punishable by fine or imprisonment, or by both.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is he guilty of?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course if that opinion was given publicly to everybody the harm might not be great to anybody, although it might not be full information, and not being full information might mislead; but what would probably happen would be the giving of that information to certain people to enable them to take advantage of it and engage in speculation in the market.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The point I am getting at is, is there any further fundamental law the violation of which makes him liable?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Any statute other than this?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; or anything else ahead of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no law now that would punish a man in the Agricultural Department who is engaged in gathering the statistics in regard to cotton or wheat crops who should divulge that information to some special person or should himself use it for speculative purposes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Should there not be some other law ahead of this, or a law empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to make regulations in order to fasten on this law and make a violation of it a crime?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. We are trying now to provide law for the punishment of just the offense the gentleman speaks of, and I think we have done it. In further answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] I desire to say that in this case the view taken by the court was in accord with Supreme Court decisions. The court says:

The views upon this subject which we have briefly expressed was sustained by numerous authorities: Feild v. Clark, 143 U. S., 649; Caha v. United States, 152 U. S., 212; Bushnell v. Leland, 164 U. S., 684; R. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S., 365.

Then the court cites several circuit court of appeals decisions.

Mr. BONYNGE. But the gentleman has not those Supreme Court decisions.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; of course I can not bring the Supreme Court library to the gentleman.

Mr. BONYNGE. It might be that the judge who rendered that opinion of course felt that those cases sustained his views, and yet when we get the opinions lawyers might differ——

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, lawyers would differ. They always do.

Mr. SHERLEY. We might differ even after the court had clearly settled it; but in the absence of a case expressly showing the contrary and in the light of these cases that do uphold similar laws, I maintain it is not a question of power but simply a question of wisdom.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose a man outside was in collusion with a man in a Department and wanted to get these secrets and the gentleman's amendment had become a law. The gentleman in the Department goes to the man outside and says, "Buy cotton." That would not be revealing any secret of the Department. He might infer from that that the report showed that the cotton crop was short and that the price would ultimately go up. It would not be a violation of this law, and still it would be encouragement to speculation. Would it not be better, in view of the difficulties surrounding the attempted enforcement of this law, to make all the facts public at the time they were obtained by the Department, and give all speculators a chance, whether they were speculators who raised cotton or speculators who bought it or speculators who manufactured it—make it open to everybody, so that everybody could form a judgment as to what the price ought to be, instead of allowing somebody to get in collusion with those inside and get not information, but advice?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there are two answers. The first is that the law now relative to publishing this data is not involved in the consideration of this amendment. We are now dealing with the concrete case of providing for the punishment of a disclosure of information that is required to be withheld. In further answer to the suggestion, it will occur that there must be some period of time in the gathering of these statistics when a man will have partial information before the period of time at which it could properly be given to the public, and if that partial information was given out it would have a very erroneous effect, and would do more harm than having no statistics. We must have a fixed time, and in fixing a time we ought to punish the man who undertakes to evade these good purposes of the law in order to speculate.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I believe everybody has had his say, and I desire only a word in conclusion upon the merits of this amendment. When I offered this amendment I had determined in my mind if I could not bring it within the rule defining the proper scope of amendment laid down by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], who has this bill in charge, and convince him that it was within the rule, that I would not press it. I recognize the danger in offering amendments to a bill of this kind, and but for the fact that the phraseology of this particular amendment had been so carefully considered, first before it was introduced by me as a bill and afterwards by the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate, I would not have offered it at all. Believing that it could be brought within the rule so clearly outlined by the gentlemen in charge of this bill, I offered it, and it is gratifying to me that I have been able to put it upon a different footing from other amendments which have been offered, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so declared, and I am especially grateful to him for so stating. It is still more gratifying to me, Mr. Chairman, that I have been able to come so near as I have in drafting this amendment to meeting the wishes of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL]. The gentleman from Massachusetts, as I stated the other day, submitted a proposition to me upon the occasion when my bill was under discussion after being amended in conference, and responding thereto, I took a dead-level rest at the bill, changing same in line with his proposition, attempting to meet his wishes. We all know he is hard to please, and it is not surprising that I have not entirely succeeded in pleasing him now, but he has very kindly said that I came very near it, and for even that, Mr. Chairman, I am especially grateful. I have confined the provisions of this amendment, being in terms the same as my bill as reintroduced, to products of the soil. Now, with reference to the objection urged by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE], I will state there is a general provision of law authorizing all the Departments to adopt regulations and rules not inconsistent with the law for the guidance of Department employees and in furtherance of the enforcement of laws with which they are chargeable. We have many cases of this character in the revenue service, the customs service, and notably cases of prosecution for violation of the quarantine regulations, regulations that are made by a Department, a violation of which is an offense, not because the Department has so declared, but because there is a statute enacted by the Congress declaring a violation of those regulations to be an offense punishable under the law. I am just as far as any Member on this floor from desiring to delegate, or attempting to delegate, if it could be done under the Constitution, authority to any Department to declare a penal offense. We do not do that or attempt to do so in this amendment. There is no effort whatever to permit the Department of Agriculture to declare an offense, but the amendment is quite narrow in its scope and simply declares that if an employee of the Agriculture Department becomes possessed of statistical information with reference to these important crops, by reason of the fact that he is an employee, and knowingly gives it out prematurely in violation of the regulations of the Department, that he shall be punished. Frequently this information exerts a marked influence on the price of our principal products.

Now, just one word more and I will ask for a vote. Mr. Chairman, as I said the other afternoon, the wording of this amendment had been considered carefully by an Attorney-General of the United States before I introduced the bill. I drew the bill, and, for the reasons stated the other day, submitted it to the Solicitor-General, who made a few verbal changes, and at his suggestion we then submitted it to the then Attorney-General of the United States, and here is what the Attorney-General in a letter to me upon the subject said; it is quite short, but I will not take time to read it all; it is in the RECORD, placed there when the bill was under discussion last year:

I beg to say that the intent and language of your bill appear to me to strike at one of the most serious evils in official relations to the Government, and to be adequate for the purpose in view. Speaking to you informally, I therefore beg to say I approve the bill. It is likely, however, that in pursuance to the recommendation of my current annual report, I shall suggest to Congress before long a measure which shall deal with misconduct in office generally, either adding to the list of Federal offenses without definition, and leaving to the courts, etc.

Mr. OLMSTED. What Attorney-General was that?

Mr. BURLESON. A gentleman who was formerly a Member of this body, but who now graces our Supreme Court, Mr. Justice William H. Moody.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to conclude. I have no words of criticism or disapprobation for anybody. As has been so well said by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], this is not a partisan matter. There is no law penalizing the misuse of the important statistical data gathered by the Department relating to our important crops. We want to make it an offense to take advantage of this information gathered by these officials in the Department of Agriculture for corrupt and speculative purposes. That is the sole purpose of this law. As I have said, this amendment is not broad, but is quite narrow, confining the offense to the premature disclosure of such information as would tend to affect the market price of products of the soil alone.

Now, I ask the adoption of the substitute amendment, which is my amendment changed to conform to the phraseology used by the revision committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, can I accept the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not accept it in a parliamentary sense. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To offer an amendment to a section. It is to punish individuals who make a wrong calculation in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I object to that, because we have passed this title. These three amendments were especially reserved, and all the sections here have been considered and passed, and it was distinctly understood by that reservation that we would return to this title for the purposes of those amendments only.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, so far as the amendments that have been acted upon, but the committee has not passed this title until it begins to read the next, and the Chair thinks the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] is in order. The Chair assumes that this section comes in at the end of the chapter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 125. Whoever being an officer or employee of the United States, or a person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office thereof, and while holding such office, employment, or position, shall, by virtue of the office or employment, willfully make, issue, or publish any corrupt calculation of agricultural crops of any kind shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall, upon conviction, be punishable by a fine of not less than $500 and imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than one or more than five years; and any court having jurisdiction shall charge at each term grand juries to investigate violations of the provisions of this act.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is a single word on the statute books that would impose the slightest punishment on any individual in the Agricultural Department who willfully issued an erroneous calculation or who made an erroneous calculation willfully. Not one.

The evil came immediately under my observation in this way. An erroneous calculation was made by some one in that Department, and we have never been able—at least, I have never been able—to find out exactly who did it. Those who made the calculation were two women. First it was "one" woman and then "two women." We succeeded in running the matter down that far in the Agricultural Department. The employees who should have made the calculation did not make it, but they put these women to doing it. They had been working in some obscure part of the Department of Agriculture. They had not theretofore been engaged in making calculations, but for some reason they were put on this work, and the result was such an erroneous one as to shock the whole tobacco market of the United States and Secretary Wilson. The error consisted of this, that the acreage of tobacco was increased about 25 or 30 per cent. By increasing the estimate as to acreage and publishing that the price of tobacco was depressed, and the tobacco grower lost and the tobacco buyer, of course, got the price reduced and got the farmer's tobacco for less than he should have gotten it.

This is not confined to tobacco. I want the committee to understand that they raise something else in this country besides tobacco. They raise corn, wheat, barley, and a great many agricultural products, and these people who make the calculations about tobacco make them for your corn and your wheat and your other agricultural products. Now, why not make it a felony for one to make or issue a corrupt calculation? There was no law on the subject. These people went unwhipped. I came all the way from Nashville up here to see about it after we had tried to settle it by letter, and Secretary Wilson himself set to work with his immediate aids, and finally found that there was a most outrageous miscalculation of the crop of tobacco; and in a few weeks corrected it and sent it out over the country. Gentlemen, with such an experience as that, with which my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES] is entirely familiar, as well as my friend Mr. STANLEY who happens to be absent because of illness, the people of Virginia and the Carolinas, and the tobacco people of Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, in Michigan, in Missouri, in Illinois, and in Indiana, suffered as a result of the miscalculation. Now, would any fair-minded jury in the United States have acquitted men who abandoned their post of duty as these men did and went out into the auxiliary departments of the Agricultural Department and brought in these poor, ignorant women and put them at their work, well knowing they were not experts at it, and that there would be some mistake one way or the other, and most probably against the growers and in favor of the trusts? This amendment will stop that and punish the guilty. I appeal to the Members to stand by the farmers all over the land and pass this amendment.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I say nothing about the necessity or importance of this kind of legislation. I say only it has no place in this bill for reasons heretofore stated. It brings in another class of persons for another thing not denounced as a crime, something that Congress has never legislated upon. For that reason, and that reason only, I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, it may be true, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], that this amendment brings under consideration another class of persons, but it brings under consideration, nevertheless, a criminal class of persons—a criminal class of the worst character.

Now, your committee only a moment ago accepted an amendment providing if a person goes out and sells information or gives information that affects the markets of the farmers, he shall be subject to a penalty which you provide. That is well and good. I am heartily and sincerely in favor of that. But what difference, pray tell me, is there in the culpability and criminality of a man who sells information and he who falsely makes up statistics designed to affect the market, to affect the corn, the wheat, or the tobacco market. The man who sells or gives out in advance the report of the Department does this for money to aid the man who plays the market; yet, the man who makes the false report more directly injures the farmer, for he does this to aid monopoly in depressing the price. You make one man a criminal for giving it out and provide no penalty for the criminal who makes out the false report that affects the price of the farmer's product. If you are going to make a law which protects the products of the country, will you not make a criminal offense for the man who, for money given him by the tobacco trust, the cotton trust, or by the wheat trust, makes out a false report and claims that the production of cotton and wheat and tobacco is so much greater this year than last, thereby affecting the price of those products and inducing the farmer to take a less price for his products than he otherwise might obtain? We had an actual experience of this in tobacco, as stated by my friend from Tennessee. When the Agricultural Department issued a report on the tobacco crop, year before last, saying that the tobacco crop set was the greatest ever known, and this was flashed over the tobacco-producing country, to the great surprise of all farmers, when the truth was discovered, the crop, instead of the largest was the smallest, the Department explained that it was an error in addition which caused this; yet many farmers sold, believing this information true. The tobacco trust reaped a great harvest by this false information. The tobacco growers had organized to destroy the trust, and the tobacco trust was endeavoring to destroy this organization. This false statement was issued, indicating that there was more tobacco planted than ever before. The trust went out with all its agencies to the farmers and said, "Sell your tobacco hurriedly." The farmer asked why. The agent of the tobacco trust said, "Because the report of the Agricultural Department states that more tobacco has been planted than ever before and the price of tobacco will go down, down, down." Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania believe that the men who are the very ground rock of the Republic, the men who woo from the earth subsistence—not only for the people in Pennsylvania, but for the world—should be made the buffer of all men who would do such criminal things as this? I am heartily in favor of this amendment, and it is a matter of sincere regret to me that it was not included in this bill without being necessary to bring it onto the floor in the way of an amendment to reach this class of criminals. [Applause.] The farmer asks no price greater than supply and demand will give him. Let him have this. I appeal to you to manacle the hands of the criminal trust which would buy up men to fetter the price of his products. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 33, noes 36.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. No quorum. On a question of so much importance we ought to have a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The Chair will count.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I call for an announcement of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is counting to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I know you are counting, and I call for the count.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11701, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 20, 1908.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2725) to extend the time for completion of the building of dam across the Mississippi River near the village of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2901. An act authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 438. An act to divide the State of Oregon into two judicial districts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2872. An act to amend an act to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2028. An act to amend section 605 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to corporations—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 902. An act authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 37. An act to transfer jurisdiction of the Washington Aqueduct, the filtration plant, and appurtenances to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 903. An act to amend section 2, chapter 433, Thirtieth Statutes at Large, entitled "An act to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square 959, in Washington, D. C."—to the Committe on the District of Columbia.

S. 2029. An act providing for the appointment of members of the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia, and of the Board of Children's Guardians—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2295. An act to extend the time within which the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company shall be required to complete the road of said company under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, as amended by an act of Congress approved June 28, 1906—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Henry C. Snyder, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And, accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for surveying homesteads within national forests—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, for care and custody of the insane in Alaska—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting letter from the Treasurer of the United States submitting an estimate of appropriation for the office of Treasurer of the United States—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Treasurer of the United States submitting an estimate of appropriation for the office of assistant clerk to the Treasurer—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TEA FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, yesterday the bill (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, was reached on the Calendar and passed over at the instance of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He stated that he desired to examine it. That bill has been having rather rough sailing in the Senate.

I hold in my hand some data which is explanatory of the bill. I ask the consent of the Senate to have it printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri presents certain data and asks that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. It was impossible to hear the Senator as to the character of the paper.

Mr. GALLINGER. It relates to the tea bill.

Mr. STONE. It is some data explanatory of the bill which was under consideration yesterday, consisting of letters and invoices. There is not very much of it.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection.

Mr. STONE. I desire to have it printed simply for the information of Senators.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONSANTO CHEMICAL WORKS,
St. Louis, December 21, 1905.

We have undertaken the manufacture of a chemical product known as "caffeine" (or theine) which, at the present time is produced entirely from tea waste, siftings, and sweepings. This material is the tailings or the refuse (waste) collected in the various tea houses and gardens of the world. It is composed of tea fluff, taken off the leaves; siftings which occur in sorting out the tea; and the sweepings or dust which accumulates in the various tea warehouses.

This material was thrown away up to the time caffeine became an important chemical product, when on analysis it was found that this tea refuse contained an appreciable amount of caffeine alkaloid; since which time it has been saved and sold to the various manufacturers and producers of caffeine.

Caffeine has become a very important chemical product, and up to a comparatively few years, has been manufactured entirely in Germany and England.

The German manufacturers are allowed to import this tea waste ad libitum, whereas the English manufacturers are also allowed to import this quality of goods, but under supervision of the Government, who see that it actually enters into the manufacture of caffeine, so that there is no possibility of this quality of goods interfering with their tea laws.

Now, as against these conditions, the American manufacturer of caffeine is compelled to denature the tea waste before importing, by adding 10 per cent of lime—for the purpose of making it unfit for food purposes—when it is allowed to enter into the United States as "crude drugs." The cost of the lime and the labor for this process at point of shipment is about 20 per cent of the cost of the goods, to which also must be added the additional heavy freight charges caused by the addition of this lime, making the actual cost to the American manufacturer almost 25 per cent more than the European manufacturers pay for the same goods at their factories.

While we have a protective duty of 25 per cent ad valorem on caffeine, it must not be overlooked that the yield of caffeine from this tea waste is about 2½ per cent. To be more explicit—say 100 pounds of tea waste yields 2½ pounds caffeine. The duty on this product is 25 per cent ad valorem, as against which must be considered that foreign manufacturers have cheap labor and pay freight to the United States on only 2½ pounds of goods, while we are compelled to pay freight charges on 110 pounds (100 pounds tea waste and 10 pounds lime) and about 25 per cent more for the same raw material, on account of the expense incurred in denaturing it by the addition of lime before it is allowed entry to the United States.

Under these conditions, you can readily see that we are justified in asking for relief from this last great unnecessary expense, to be in position to compete with the European manufacturers. And furthermore, as such outlay is paid to foreign labor by American manufacturers, while no one in this country gets any benefit whatever from it.

Your bill provides that the importation of this tea waste shall be under regulations, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, consequently there can be no possible danger of these goods reaching the market for food purposes; and, in order that you may be familiar with the material as we import it, we are sending you a sample by mail, under separate cover, and a glance will convince you that there is no earthly possibility of such material being accepted for consumption as tea—as no one would accept it as a gift for that purpose.

We believe the policy of the Government is to aid and foster manufacturing industries in this country, and from what we have stated you can readily appreciate the great disadvantage we are under in competing with the foreign manufacturers on caffeine, even with 25 per cent duty as at present imposed on the article. All we ask is to be placed on an equal basis with these foreign manufacturers, in so far as the raw material is concerned, by allowing us to import it in its natural state as collected—the same as they do.

We feel confident that you will be able from the foregoing to appreciate the injustice of the position occupied by us, and be able to get sufficient support from your colleagues to secure the passage of the bill in question at the earliest possible date.

MONSANTO CHEMICAL WORKS,
MANUFACTURERS OF MODERN CHEMICAL PRODUCTS,
OFFICE, 1810 SOUTH SECOND STREET,
St. Louis, February 22, 1906.

Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We beg to acknowledge receipt of your favors of the 15th and 16th instant, and thank you for sending us a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which we read with much interest. We will endeavor to answer your questions, as well as those that were brought up in the short debate in the Senate.

There is no duty on tea at the present time, nor has there been since January 1, 1903, the law creating the tariff on tea having been repealed; in consequence tea sweepings would also come in free if our bill is passed. In view of the foregoing you will readily see that it is not a tariff bill either for raising or reducing revenue, but simply an amendment to the tea act of March, 1897.

The position we occupy as manufacturers of caffeine is just the same as the manufacturers of quinine in this country would be in if they were compelled to add lime at point of shipment to cinchona bark, which is the raw material for manufacturing quinine, while the foreign governments do not impose that hardship on their manufacturers.

Caffeine is a standard chemical product, recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia the same as quinine, morphine, or any other important chemical product. In order that you may be familiar with the finished product—caffeine (or theine)—we are sending you by mail, under separate cover, a sample of our manufacture. Caffeine was first discovered in coffee, from which it derives its name, but later on it was discovered that tea contained a larger percentage of this alkaloid; hence tea is now used entirely for the manufacture of the article. It is known both chemically and scientifically as caffeine or theine, these names being synonymous with the identical product.

ST. LOUIS, April 16, 1906.

Referring to the conversation the writer had with you when you were last in the city, we inclose herewith a memorandum giving a list of the extra charges (by reason of denaturing) taken from our invoices of the last three shipments of tea sweepings to us, to which we have added additional expenses incident to these charges on said shipments.

You will note the cost to us for denaturing the tea waste is 18 to 19 per cent of the original cost of the goods, which anyone will admit is a fearful disadvantage for any manufacturer to be under on raw material when competing with other manufacturers who are not under that expense, as in this case the Germans, who have, in addition, the advantage of cheaper labor.

As explained to you, we are obliged to rent a warehouse in which to have this denaturing done, and in consequence of the lime we can not use the same bags, but are obliged to buy new stout bags to prevent its sifting through en route, whereas if your bill is passed and becomes law the goods can be shipped to us in the same bags as it comes down from the plantations.

If the members of your honorable body would see these figures, our position would be more thoroughly appreciated and they would realize that our request for relief from this burden is warranted by the facts. You understand that these charges are not only for the present shipments, but stand as a constant drain on us as long as we are manufacturing caffeine unless we get relief by the passage of your bill, which also provides full protection for the consumers.

Also the following taken from the New York Drug Reporter, of January 29, 1906:

TEA SWEEPINGS BILL.

With a view to enabling chemical manufacturers to import tea sweepings, tea waste, etc., for the manufacture of certain products, Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, in the last Congress presented a bill to relieve manufacturers from certain restrictions imposed by the pure-tea act. The bill proposed to add a proviso to the act to the effect that "nothing herein shall affect or prevent the importation into the United States of any merchandise as tea, tea waste, tea siftings, or tea sweepings for the sole purpose of manufacturing theine, caffeine, or other chemical products whereby the identity and character of the original material is entirely destroyed; and that importers and manufacturers who import or bring into the United States such tea, tea waste, tea siftings, or tea sweepings, shall give suitable bond to the United States that such imported material shall be so used under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury." This bill was referred to the Committee on Finance, but its advocates did not urge it with sufficient vigor to impress the committee with its importance, and it was permitted to die without a report.

Early in the present session Senator STONE, of Missouri, who has succeeded Senator Cockrell, reintroduced the bill and has already succeeded in securing a favorable report thereon, the Treasury Department placing no obstacle in the way of its enactment. The bill is now on the Senate Calendar, and will probably be passed as soon as an opportunity is offered for calling it up.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1773) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,'" reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9210) to authorize the court of county commissioners of Geneva County, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River at or near the Jones Old Ferry, in Geneva County, Ala., reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 134) granting leaves of absence to homesteaders on lands to be irrigated under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

STENOGRAPHER FOR COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. DICK, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,020 per annum, said employment to continue during the Sixtieth Congress.

A bill (S. 4339) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Klock (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4340) granting an increase of pension to Calvin Gibbons (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4341) granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE introduced a bill (S. 4342) granting an increase of pension to Angie E. Kerr, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 4343) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Medina, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4344) granting an increase of pension to Archibald N. Hogans, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4345) for the relief of Catherine Grace, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4346) granting an increase of pension to William M. Irvin (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4347) granting an increase of pension to Henry Reynolds; and

A bill (S. 4348) granting an increase of pension to Edward Thompson.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4349) authorizing the President to promote Capt. James Evelyn Pilcher, United States Army, retired, to the grade of major, United States Army, retired; and

A bill (S. 4350) providing for recognition of meritorious services of persons who served as officers of volunteers during the civil war.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4351) for the relief of the Alaska Pacific Railway and Terminal Company, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 4352) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Ann Metzinger, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4353) for the relief of Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BULKELEY introduced a bill (S. 4354) to amend the national-bank act in regard to reserve deposits, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BULKELEY. If the Senate will permit me, I will state the object of the bill. In connection with whatever emergency circulation bill the Senate may hereafter adopt, I feel that a measure of this character will have as great an influence for the help of the financial institutions of the country in case of a panic as any emergency bill which we may pass. The object is to increase the reserve held in reserve and central reserve cities by national banks depositing a part of their reserve in those cities, and to prevent the payment of interest on such deposits where such deposits are counted as a part of the lawful money reserve of the depositing banks.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BULKELEY introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (S. 4355) granting an increase of compensation to circuit judges of the United States; and

A bill (S. 4356) granting an increase of compensation to district judges of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4357) for the relief of the heirs of Leon Frank, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4358) granting an increase of pension to Isaac B. Doolittle; and

A bill (S. 4359) granting an increase of pension to William T. Johnson.

Mr. SMITH introduced a bill (S. 4360) to provide for the erection of a public building at Agricultural College, Michigan, and the establishment of a Weather Bureau station therein, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 4361) to provide for compulsory education of the native children of Alaska, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the reference is made, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he desires to have the bill referred to his committee? It should properly go to the Committee on Territories, although we have no particular desire to take up the question of the compulsory education of the Eskimo children in Alaska. Still, in the ordinary course, there is where the bill belongs.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Committee on Education and Labor has no desire to contest the question of reference with the Senator's committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4362) for the relief of James Henry and Porter Henry;

A bill (S. 4363) for the relief of Jefferson Phillips; and

A bill (S. 4364) for the relief of the estate of Sylvia Cannon, deceased.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (S. 4365) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Greenville, N. C.;

A bill (S. 4366) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Monroe, N. C.;

A bill (S. 4367) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Henderson, N. C.;

A bill (S. 4368) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Wilson, N. C.;

A bill (S. 4369) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Tarboro, N. C.; and

A bill (S. 4370) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Rocky Mount, N. C.

Mr. RAYNER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4371) for the relief of Abner C. Proctor; and

A bill (S. 4372) for the relief of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Middletown, Md.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 4373) for the relief of the estate of John McCullough, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 4374) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the lands of the United States containing coal," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WHYTE introduced a bill (S. 4375) authorizing the Takoma Springs Ice Company to lay a pipe line under certain streets and roads in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NELSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 37) disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 38) granting to the State of Michigan permission to use for its own purposes unused portions of condemned cannon granted to that State by joint resolution of June 23, 1906, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $60,000 for expense of surveys, allotment of lands to Indians, salaries and expenses of the commission heretofore appointed for the classification of the Flathead Indian Reservation lands, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 for the construction of a suitable fence of iron and steel about the monument erected in 1883 on the Big Hole battlefield, Montana, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CACHE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12412) to authorize the Missouri and North Arkansas Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Cache River, in Woodruff County, Ark. I make the request at this time because it is difficult to find an opportunity to do so while the bill for the revision of the criminal code is pending. I understand the ruling of the Chair is that we can not disturb that measure by a request of this character.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Arkansas will withhold his request until after the routine morning business is closed, the Chair will recognize the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and is hereby, directed to suspend its investigation into the affairs of the International Harvester Company, under the terms of a resolution authorizing such an investigation which passed the Senate December 17, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, on the 17th of December, 1906, I presented a resolution, which was passed by the Senate, directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make an investigation of the affairs of the International Harvester Company. In the regular course of business I anticipated that when this Congress convened in December we would have a report from that Department; but in view of the fact that the Department has been very much engaged in other branches of investigation, I suppose it has not had time to give proper attention to the resolution in question.

I was not aware when I introduced the resolution that the Department of Justice was engaged in an investigation of this harvester company, and I did not know until a few days ago that the Department of Justice had recently completed an investigation of this trust and was in a position to proceed against it in the courts.

Upon making inquiry concerning the matter, I found that the Department of Justice hesitated to begin proceedings, in view of the fact that the Department of Commerce and Labor is engaged in the investigation directed by the Senate. As it is entirely unnecessary that two Departments should both be devoting their time and attention to this concern, I have offered the resolution which has been read at the desk in order to relieve the Commerce and Labor Department of further responsibility, so as to permit the Department of Justice to proceed against the trust under the investigation which has been made, and which I am advised is now completed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I stated that the Department of Justice has but recently completed an investigation of this harvester trust and is ready to proceed in the courts against it, and that the only obstacle to this action is the pending investigation in the Department of Commerce and Labor, which I now propose by this resolution to relieve that Department of.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator why the investigation which the Department of Commerce and Labor is making would be any obstacle whatever to the Department of Justice in proceeding upon the facts which it has ascertained? On the contrary, strictly——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of Senators to the necessity of addressing the Chair, for the Reporters can not hear them unless they do so.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is a certain comity existing between the various Departments of the Government, and in view of the fact that the Department of Justice is aware that the Department of Commerce and Labor is investigating this monopoly, it hesitates to proceed until that investigation is finished or suspended.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I must confess that as I have listened to the Senator the two statements do not appear to me to harmonize. Why the Department of Justice would not act until the Department of Commerce and Labor had completed its investigations ordered by resolution of the Senate could not be upon the theory of comity, but upon the theory that it might be possible that the investigation by the Department of Commerce and Labor would reveal facts which would prevent the Department of Justice from proceeding with its prosecution. If that is true, then the investigation should proceed.

If, on the contrary, the investigation would reveal still more facts which would give the Department of Justice still more ammunition, then still more should the investigation by the Department of Commerce and Labor proceed. If the Department of Justice feels that it has abundant material upon which to proceed against the harvester company, it could not possibly be hurt, but would certainly be helped in that prosecution by any further facts that would be brought out by this investigation, unless the investigation should disclose facts which would raise a doubt in the mind of the Department of Justice whether or not it should proceed in its prosecution. In either event, the present investigation can result only in more of the truth being known, more light thrown on the whole subject. I must say that, upon the statement of the Senator, it seems to me that the investigation should proceed. No hurt can come from it; great help may come from it. Injustice can not be done by it; justice may be furthered by it.

I am not particular about the matter, but that is the way it appears to me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota. Is the Department of Commerce and Labor cognizant of the proposed action? As I understand it, the Department of Commerce and Labor is now proceeding in the investigation of this matter.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Directed by the Senate——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Directed by the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. More than thirteen months ago.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I so understood the Senator. Now, I ask, is the Department of Commerce and Labor at present advised of the action proposed to be taken by the Senate in discontinuing the investigation?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I did not consider it necessary to advise the Department of Commerce and Labor of my intention to offer the original resolution directing the investigation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand that.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will answer the Senator. In view of the fact that the Department of Justice, as I am advised, has made a complete investigation and is ready to proceed in the case, I did not consider it necessary to consult with the Department of Commerce and Labor on the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It occurred to me, if the Senator will pardon me a moment longer, that we ought not to play with one of the great Departments of the Government; that not only having requested that Department, but having commanded that Department to make this investigation, we ought not to halt the Department in making it before it has had an opportunity to make its investigation and come to a conclusion.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just one moment, and then I am through. The further theory that is urged hardly seems to be tenable, as has been stated by the Senator from Indiana. I can not conceive that the Department of Justice, having convinced itself that a corporation or a trust or any other person has deliberately violated the law of the land, would be halted in its efforts to bring that corporation to justice from the simple fact that another Department of the Government was investigating the same party.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota another question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is suggested by the question asked by the Senator from Wyoming. I ask the Senator whether his action this morning is taken at the request of the Department of Justice?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My action this morning is not taken at the request of anyone, but it is taken after due inquiry as to the ability and readiness of the Department of Justice to proceed in this case. I am satisfied that the Department is not only ready but anxious to go ahead, and it should be permitted to proceed without hindrance from any source.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But still, Mr. President, the more I think about it the clearer it becomes that the Department of Justice would certainly be aided by the work which the Department of Commerce and Labor has been doing and which it has not yet completed. It is strange to my mind that the Department of Justice would not want all the assistance that it could get. Whichever view it takes, if it feels that it has enough facts and that this further investigation would reveal more facts, then it will be assisted. If it feels that this investigation will disclose facts upon which it ought not to proceed, then it will be benefited. In either case the course of justice will be served.

I was very profoundly impressed by the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming as to why, after a Department under order from the Senate has proceeded for months in an investigation, it should suddenly be halted before its work is finished and all the work already done completely wasted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not know that the Department of Commerce and Labor has done anything whatever in the direction of making the investigation in question. It is enough for me to know that the Department of Justice is satisfied that it has sufficient facts upon which to proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will it hurt it to have more facts?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. How does the Senator from Indiana know that the Department of Commerce and Labor can supply the Department of Justice with more facts?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And how does the Senator from North Dakota know that it can not? That is the point.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. When the Department of Justice tells me that it has sufficient facts upon which to proceed, that is conclusive to my mind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has the Department of Justice told the Senator that it did not want any more facts?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, that is rather begging the question, it seems to me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, it is not.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Now, I ask the Senator from Indiana, Does he oppose the beginning of suits under existing law against this combination, the International Harvester trust?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On the contrary, I favor the beginning of suits against any wrongdoer at any time. I see no reason, Mr. President, why the Department of Justice, charged with the execution of the law, should not proceed when it itself says that it has sufficient facts and does not want any further facts that an additional investigation might develop. The Senator has not yet shown any reason why the Department of Justice should not proceed at any time it sees fit.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think I have shown conclusively——

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In just a minute, please. I think I have shown conclusively that the Department of Justice is satisfied, and that is the Department which must take hold of this matter and handle it through the courts when it is satisfied that it has sufficient information upon which to proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire rises to a point of order, which he will state.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to know what is the question before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution is in order, is it not, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota submitted the resolution and asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. After the resolution had been read for the information of the Senate the Chair asked if there was objection, and no objection was interposed. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the Senator has stated several times that the Department of Justice has sufficiently investigated this question to satisfy itself that it should take action, but I do not understand whether the Senator has said that the Department of Justice states that it is delayed in taking action by reason of the continuance of the investigation by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Now, if the Department of Justice is in possession of facts which it deems sufficient to authorize it to proceed, and is willing to say that it can not proceed and believes it ought not to proceed unless the investigation by the other Department shall stop, I can see reason for the action proposed to be taken by the Senator. But unless the Department of Justice shall make that contention there does not seem to me to be any reason to stop the Department of Commerce and Labor from pursuing the investigation.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I supposed I had made myself thoroughly understood on that point. I had said in words as strong as I know how to use them that the Department of Justice, according to the best advices I have—and my advices are very good—has stated that it hesitates to proceed with this case while an investigation is pending in another Department. At the same time the Department of Justice assures me that it has sufficient information upon which to proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Now, right here, if there was any possible way of ascertaining how long the Department of Commerce and Labor proposed to continue the investigation, or if we had any assurance that it would continue it and bring a report into this body at an early date, I should not be pressing this matter. But, Mr. President, I do not believe that this Congress, or at least this winter's session of the Congress, will see a report from the Department of Commerce and Labor, on account of the fact that that Department has been very busily engaged with other investigations. It is most important to the great grain-growing interests of the country that there should be no further delay.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield for a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if the Senator yields for a question, I will repeat the question asked by the Senator from Oregon, and which the Senator, if he will pardon me, did not answer. Why does the continuance of the investigation by the Department of Commerce and Labor delay the Department of Justice from doing its duty, which it says it is already prepared to do? Why should there be delay? If the Senator has explained that, I have not been able to understand it. I think the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] has put his finger upon the weak point in this resolution. The Senator did not explain why the Department of Justice is delaying and why it does not proceed. What matter is it to the Department of Justice, if it is ready to proceed, whether the Department of Commerce and Labor has made its report or not, will complete it, or never completes it? If it is ready to go ahead, why is it delayed by the other investigation? That is the weak point in the Senator's resolution.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I greatly regret that I have not been able to make the distinguished Senator from Indiana understand the situation. I will restate the case for his benefit. I stated a while ago that there is a certain amount of comity existing between Departments, as there is existing between the Departments and the legislative branch of the Government. If a resolution or a bill were pending here or in the other branch of Congress that affected some duty which was to be performed by an administrative branch of the Government, undoubtedly that administrative branch would hesitate to proceed to perform that duty until that measure had been acted upon by this body or the other House.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. FULTON. If I understand the Senator correctly, it is a comity which rests in tradition that when one Department is pursuing a certain investigation the other Department, although the law requires it to enforce the law, will not proceed. I suggest, then, to the Senator that he amend his resolution and make it read "that the Department of Justice is instructed to proceed and prosecute this case, if it deems it has sufficient evidence, without regard to the investigation being prosecuted by the Department of Commerce and Labor," and thus relieve the Department of Justice from that embarrassment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If, as the Senator says, the Department of Justice has legal authority to proceed, why should we give it additional authority?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it has legal authority to proceed——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. For a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it has legal authority to proceed and the facts on which to proceed, I will ask the Senator whether it is not its legal duty to proceed and whether comity (I do not understand comity between Departments; I understand comity between States) can in any wise stand in the way of the Department of Justice or any of the other Departments in doing justice under the law?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is quite clear that I will be unable to make my friend from Indiana understand my point of view.

I desire now, Mr. President, to say a further word on this subject. The International Harvester trust was organized in August, 1902. There were at that time some eight or ten separate companies engaged in the manufacture of harvesting machinery. About that time an effort was made to get these different constituent companies together, to consolidate them. That effort was finally successful, and eight of the constituent companies went into this International Harvester trust.

The International Harvester Company was organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey with a capital of $120,000,000. About the same time the International Harvester Company of America, with a capital of $1,000,000, was organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin by the same men, the stock of the smaller company being held by the larger one. It was clearly the purpose of this monopoly, of this combination, to evade the Federal law by having the manufacturing company organized under the laws of one State and the distributing or selling company organized under the laws of another State.

Mr. President, at the time that this monopoly was created the average price of a self-binder to a farmer in my part of the country was from $95 to $105. To-day the same machine costs the farmer $145, or it did last year, and I am advised that the monopoly has put the price of machines for the present year at $150.

That is not all, Mr. President. The International Harvester Company obtained control and a monopoly over most of the ingredients entering into the manufacture of binding twine, so that the farmer who purchased his binding machinery of the trust must also buy his binding twine of the trust.

And that is not all. They have obtained control over several manufacturing establishments devoted to the making of gasoline engines, an establishment devoted to the manufacture of cream separators, and one engaged in the manuafcture of manure spreaders. They have also secured a monopoly of the harness business, as well as of other necessary articles that the farmers of the country must buy; and all these articles have been advanced in price in keeping with the price that the trust has put upon its harvesting machinery.

Mr. President, in my own State of North Dakota, which produces over $100,000,000 worth of grain every year—wheat, barley, oats, and flax—the farmers are obliged to purchase somewhere near 10,000 binders every year. The price of these binders has been advanced since 1902 from about $100 to about $150. Senators can easily calculate the amount of tribute that the farmers of my State alone are obliged to pay to this monopoly.

It is the purpose undobutedly of the International Hervester Company to extend its operations to every class of farm machinery—to wagons, to buggies, to plows—until it controls every implement that the American farmer must have to carry on his business, and it is this thing, Mr. President, of which I complain. It is for this reason that I am anxious that the Department of Justice shall be allowed to proceed without delay in this matter.

At this very hour, Mr. President, this monopoly in farming implements is taking a hand in the politics of the State of North Dakota. It is laying its wires at this moment, through its trusted political agents, to capture and control the delegates who will represent that State in the next Republican national convention. Not alone this, but the edict has gone forth from this monopoly that I am to be defeated for the United States Senate because I had the temerity to offer a resolution of investigation here.

Mr. President, the political fortunes of the individual are as but a grain of sand compared with the mountain of injustice that can be wrought by an institution of this kind. I accept the challenge of this monopoly, and am ready to meet it in political combat in the State of North Dakota. If the people of my

State desire to have the politics of the State controlled by a monopoly of this kind, then, Mr. President, they do not want me in this body as one of their Senators.

I now ask for a vote on the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be again read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CLAY. I object to the present consideration of the resolution, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's objection comes too late. The resolution is before the Senate by consent of the Senate. The Chair put the question of consideration when the resolution was read to the Senate, as requested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I rise for information. Is the investigation which is being carried on by the Department of Commerce and Labor being conducted under the authority of the Senate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Evidently the Senator from Illinois was not in the Chamber at the beginning of this discussion.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I have just come into the Chamber.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then, I will state for the information of the Senator that the investigation which is supposed to be in progress by the Department of Commerce and Labor was authorized by the Senate over thirteen months ago under a resolution which I introduced here and which was passed on the 17th of December, 1906. A few days ago I was advised that the Department of Justice, which has been making an exhaustive investigation of this matter on its own account and in its own quiet way, had completed the investigation and was ready to proceed in the courts against this monopoly. So I desire by the passage of this resolution to relieve the Department of Justice from any embarrassment that may exist in view of the investigation which the Department of Commerce and Labor is supposed to be making.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the only suggestion I have to make is that if the Department of Commerce and Labor has started on this investigation, some communication ought to be had to learn what investigation has been made, how far it has gone, or how near it is to being ready to make a report. This is pretty summary action on the part of the Senate, it seems to me, toward one of the great Departments of the Government.

All I know on this subject is what I have seen from time to time in the newspapers. I judge from the reports that I have noticed in the papers that this Department has been vigorous and energetic in the investigation, that the Department has gathered a large amount of information, and is about ready to make an exhaustive report that will not only be of benefit to the Senate itself, but of great benefit to the general public. I think we ought to be a little slow in adopting such a resolution as this at this time without any communication whatever, either directly or indirectly, with the Department that has been considering the subject.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, it seems to me that, in view of the fact that the Senate of the United States gave the authority and directed this Department to make the investigations, it has the right to relieve the Department of all responsibility on that subject.

Mr. BACON. I should like to know——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota, in furtherance of the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], if he has any information as to the degree that the Department of Commerce and Labor has progressed in this investigation and how near it may be to a conclusion?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I have not any official information on the subject, but I have sufficient information to lead me to believe that the Department of Commerce and Labor would be very glad to be relieved from this investigation.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator has information of that kind, it ought to be somewhat official, and not simply an impression which he may have.

I should like to ask the Senator another question, because I desire to vote with some degree of satisfaction to myself upon the question. In what way will further investigation by the Department of Commerce and Labor interfere with the action of the Department of Justice? If it be true—and I have no doubt it is true, and I entirely sympathize with the utterances of the Senator as to the oppression of this trust—if it be true that the Department of Commerce and Labor is making an investigation the results of which it is important we should know, in what way will that interfere with the Department of Justice in the progress of its work?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I have stated, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] several times this morning, that the Department of Justice has but recently completed a very exhaustive investigation of this company; that it is ready to proceed in the courts, and that the only reason it does not proceed is on account of the courtesy—to use a different term, so that my friend from Indiana may comprehend it—the courtesy that is supposed to exist between the several Departments.

Mr. BACON. But has the Senator from North Dakota information that the Department of Justice is suspending its operations in order that it may await the action of the Department of Commerce and Labor in response to the direction of this body?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No, Mr. President; not that it is suspending its operations, but that it prefers to proceed without interruption such as a report from another Department might cause. The Department of Justice has an abundance of information already.

Mr. BACON. If there is nothing of the kind, then, I do not see how it can interfere.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have stated that the Department of Justice is ready to proceed with the case; that it has gathered enough information to justify it going on with the prosecution, and that the only thing which prevents that action is the fact that an investigation of the same subject is supposed to be in progress by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator if it is a matter of duty or of courtesy?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator may call it "courtesy" or "duty," as he pleases. I am stating the facts as I understand them.

Mr. BACON. I want to know from the Senator if he has any official information that the Department of Justice is suspending its action in beginning this prosecution on account of the pendency of this resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that the Department of Justice knows nothing of the existence of this resolution.

Mr. BACON. That the Department of Justice is not proceeding because of this resolution? Has the Senator any official information of that fact?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have told the Senator from Georgia as clearly as I knew how, and I stated to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], but I seem to be unable to make either one of the Senators understand, that the Department of Justice is ready to proceed if the Department of Commerce and Labor be relieved of the responsibility of further investigation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. For a question.

Mr. CLAPP. The question has been asked here, if my memory is not treacherous, twenty-seven times, but the Senator from North Dakota does not seem to me to directly answer it, whether the Senator from North Dakota knows or assumes that the Department of Justice will not proceed while the Department of Commerce and Labor is investigating this subject; or does he know from the Department of Justice that that Department is in fact awaiting some action on the part of the Department of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment. If that is true, I think perhaps we ought to pass the resolution; if it is not true, I think it would be most remarkable to stop the investigation by a great Department of the Government, and then, without any consultation with that Department, recall the matter without knowing how far the investigation may have proceeded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the Department of Justice is not awaiting action on the part of the Department of Commerce and Labor. On the contrary, the Department of Justice would be very glad if the Department of Commerce and Labor were relieved from the further investigation, so that the Department of Justice might go on and make the investigation.

Mr. BACON. How does the Senator know that fact?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I would hardly come into this Chamber with a proposition so serious as this if I did not know what I was talking about. I do not know that I am obliged to tell the Senate or the Senator from Georgia particularly what my conversation has been with officers of the Department of Justice. I state to the Senator that I know the Department of Justice is ready to proceed with this case, and that the only reason why it does not proceed is because of the pending investigation in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. For a question.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator from North Dakota undertake to tell the Senate that the Department of Justice has investigated the conduct of this trust; that it finds that it has violated the antitrust laws of the country; that it intends to proceed against this trust for a violation of the law and has not done so solely for the reason that a resolution has been passed authorizing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make an investigation?

Now, let me ask the Senator, is it not true that it is the duty of the Department of Justice to investigate all violations of the antitrust law and to proceed to enforce the law regardless of any resolution of the Senate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, that is precisely what I desire to have the Department of Justice do. The question of whether this harvester trust has violated the law is one, I think, which the Senator from Georgia will concede belongs to the courts to decide. The question of proceeding in the courts to ascertain that fact belongs to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice is ready to do that thing.

Mr. CLAY. Let me ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Thirteen months ago this Senate passed a resolution instructing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make this investigation?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. That resolution states the reasons why it ought to be made. Now, the Department of Commerce and Labor has made a partial investigation. If this resolution introduced by the Senator should be adopted, it would be construed as meaning that the Senate does not desire any further investigation made into the conduct of this company; it would be simply construed that we wanted the investigation stopped; that the Senate did not believe there was anything in the former resolution, and the resolution, if adopted by the Senate, in my opinion would put the Senate in an improper light.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I entirely disagree with the Senator. If I had been aware that the Department of Justice was making an investigation of the harvester trust, I would not have offered the original resolution; but it having come to my knowledge within the last few days that the Department of Justice has made that investigation and is ready to proceed, I am endeavoring here to remove the obstruction and allow it to proceed in the interest of the American farmer. That is all there is to this question. This resolution is in the interest of progress. It is intended to hasten and facilitate the commencement of the forthcoming suit by the Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the reading of the resolution, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I move as a substitute that the Department of Commerce and Labor be requested to make a report to the Senate as to what progress has been made under the resolution therein named, and how long before the Department will be ready to make a full and complete response to the resolution.

I do that for this reason, among others: This subject has been given to one of the great Departments of the Government. The officer in charge of that Department, in my judgment, has discharged his duties in a manner that is not only creditable to the Department itself, but to the country; and to pass the resolution as proposed by the Senator from North Dakota would be a reflection upon him that is not only unwarranted, but I think it would be an entirely undignified action for the Senate to take. It would be a most extraordinary proceeding for this body at this stage to adopt a resolution of that kind without giving the officer in charge of the investigation an opportunity to show to the Senate and the country what he has done.

I do not sympathize with the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota that the Department of Justice can not proceed so long as this investigation is going on in the Department of Commerce and Labor. There is absolutely no connection between the two Departments. As was well said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], the law requires that the Department of Justice shall see that the laws that are upon the statute books of our country shall be obeyed. If the Department of Justice, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has said again and again here, has information that the International Harvester Company is a violator of the law, then it is the duty of the Attorney-General, without waiting upon the Senate or the House, to enforce the law, and it is his duty to do it without waiting upon the action of any other Department. I think that the Attorney-General will discharge his duty regardless of any action of the Senate. I believe that he is a faithful and conscientious administrator of that great Department, and it is not necessary for the Senate to take the proposed action here in order to relieve the Department of Justice. Certainly I trust that my substitute will be adopted, so that we can obtain the information from the Department of Commerce and Labor without casting the reflection upon it that we will if the resolution as it now stands be adopted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois was not in the Chamber when I stated several times this morning that there exists between the several Departments of the Government a certain amount of comity or courtesy, the same as there exists between the Departments and the legislative branch. For instance, if there were a bill or a resolution pending in this body directing a Department to do a certain thing and that bill had not been acted upon, the Department would not be likely to proceed to do that thing until action was taken upon the bill or resolution. There is a comity and courtesy existing between the different Executive Departments, as there is between the Departments and the legislative branch.

I will say to the Senator again that I believe the Department of Justice wants to proceed with this case, because, as I am advised, they have ample information upon which to proceed. Why should we continue a double investigation and have two Departments engaged on it instead of one?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is no relation between the two Departments on this subject. The laws are upon the statute books and the Department of Justice is established for the purpose of seeing that the laws shall be obeyed. As I remarked a moment ago, it is the duty of the Attorney-General to proceed whenever that Department is advised that the law has been violated.

The resolution that was adopted thirteen months ago is a resolution that directed the Department of Commerce and Labor to give the Senate of the United States certain information. We want that information, regardless of what may be done by the Department of Justice. I fail to see why that Department should refrain from taking action simply because the Senate has asked for this information.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator's substitute will be voted down. In my judgment, there ought not to be any further delay in this matter.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield for a question.

Mr. STONE. Well, for a question. It does not seem to me, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to say so——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. It does not seem to me that there is any such comity or relation of courtesy between two Departments as ought to delay action on the part of the Department of Justice. If any such condition as that detailed by the Senator from North Dakota, apparently on his own knowledge of the facts, exists—and no doubt it does—then the Department of Justice ought to proceed on its own motion instantly; but, with the facts in its possession, if it does not do so or has not done so, then it seems to me that the time has come when there ought to be some inquiry into and about the Department of Justice itself.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that, if we pass this resolution and the Department of Justice in due time does not proceed, I shall join the Senator in another resolution directing it to proceed.

Mr. STONE. But I rose more particularly, Mr. President, to address an inquiry to the Senator from North Dakota, who seems to have looked into the subject with great care. He says, as I understand the matter, that there is a monopoly, or what ordinarily is termed a trust, in the manufacture and disposition of agricultural machines of a certain character—harvesting machines particularly. If there is such a trust, such a monopoly, I am curious to know from the distinguished Senator if he cares to tell me what, in his opinion, is the cause or basis for that trust and what has led up to it? Is there any law of this country or any public policy under which its organization is made possible or more easy? The Senator says that such machines have been extravagantly advanced in price within recent months—the one he instanced having been advanced from $100, at which it was sold not long since, to $150 now. Does he know, as I am told it is the fact, that machines of that character are sold across the border in Canada and in the States of Central and South America for about one-half the price at which they are sold to the farmers of North Dakota and Missouri? Can the Senator inform the Senate, or at least gratify my curiosity, by telling me what, in his opinion, is the main cause for the existence of this trust? To be specific, I will ask him to what extent does he think the tariff duties imposed upon the importation of agricultural machinery have had to do with it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I had hoped that we would avoid a partisan discussion on this matter. I think the Senator from Missouri and myself are very much of the same opinion about this combination; and at some future time, when we get around to revising the tariff, if I am a member of this body and the Senator is a member of it—and I hope he will be—I will be very glad to discuss the tariff phases of this case.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; for a question.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me, if we are to judge by things that have happened and are happening, it is questionable whether the Senator from North Dakota or I or any of us will be members of this body when we come to revise the tariff and correct these evils. [Laughter.]

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, as a Republican, I think I can assure the Senator that the tariff schedules will be revised along about the month of April, 1909.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, will the Senator oblige me by answering the particular question I put to him a while ago, just for my information?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like to have the Senator state the question again more explicitly.

Mr. STONE. What does the Senator think is the chief cause for the existence of this miserable monopoly that is grinding the life out of the farmers of North Dakota and Missouri and all the other agricultural States of the Union?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I do not think that the tariff is the cause.

Mr. STONE. Then what is the cause?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The ability of a great aggregation of capital in greedy hands to monopolize a certain line of manufacture.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator think that if machinery of this kind could be imported into this country without a prohibitory tariff it would have no effect upon this monopoly?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I do not know that harvesting machines are made abroad. I do not believe they are; but if they are, I doubt if you could find an American farmer anywhere that would use a foreign-made harvesting machine.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he desires to maintain a duty on productions of this kind in the interest of a monopoly, that it may shelter itself behind the law and plunder his constituency and mine?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, if I thought——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to Senators——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Just one moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to Senators that they address the Chair——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think I have the floor——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And not proceed until they have the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I supposed I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator had yielded to the Senator from Missouri, the Chair understood.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Only for a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I was about to say to the Senator from Missouri that I do not believe the tariff upon the articles that are used in the manufacture of harvesting machines has anything to do with the excessive prices which are being charged to the American farmers to-day.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I suggested to the Senator a while ago that it seemed to me that all he desires to accomplish could be accomplished by amending his resolution so that it would read that "the comity which has so happily existed between these two Departments would not, in the judgment of the Senate, be disturbed if the Department of Justice were to proceed with this prosecution."

But, Mr. President, it does not seem to me that we ought, without further investigation, to vote on this resolution. It is a very serious matter to submit a question of this importance to a Department and then while the investigation is pending to withdrawn it from the Department; and I shall not be content to do it unless it is investigated by a committee. Therefore I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH obtained the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I can not yield just for the moment, as I desire to say a word in response to the request of the Senator from Oregon. I trust the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon his motion.

Mr. FULTON. I must insist upon the motion, for I think it would be a very great mistake to withdraw this matter from the Department of Commerce and Labor unless there shall be an investigation by a committee which assures the Senate that it is necessary that it shall be done.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the Department of Commerce and Labor——

Mr. FULTON. I am not particular about the committee. If it is thought that the Committee on Commerce is the proper committee, I shall have no objection, but I think the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is the proper committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If no other Department had made an investigation of this question, I certainly would not be here with this resolution. But I know that another Department has made an investigation of it and is ready to proceed under that investigation. All these motions to amend and to refer simply delay the whole thing, and for that reason I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon his motion.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I desire to ask the Senator a question. As I understand the proposition, it is this: I understand the Senator from North Dakota to say that the Department of Justice is ready and willing to proceed with this case; that the only thing which prevents the Department of Justice from instituting suit is the comity or courtesy which exists between the two Departments. Is that correct?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is right.

Mr. PILES. If that be correct, it seems to me we are wasting our time here in discussing this question. Certainly, if the Department of Justice is willing and ready to commence this suit and has sufficient facts upon which to institute a suit in equity to declare this concern a trust and a violator of the law, and if the Department of Justice shall say, standing upon its dignity and what in courtesy is due it, which it has a right to do, to the Department of Commerce and Labor, "Will you consider it discourteous if this Department shall institute a suit in equity, notwithstanding your investigations?" and if the Department of Commerce and Labor is willing to give up this investigation and permit the Department of Justice to proceed, they will say: "This Department will not consider that you have violated the courtesy due from one Department to another by proceeding with your suit." All the Senator from North Dakota has to do is to ask the Department of Commerce and Labor to state to the Department of Justice that it will not consider it a discourtesy upon the part of that Department if it proceeds with its suit.

For my part, I agree with the Senator from Georgia. The Senate has ordered an inquiry here. It has directed a Department of this Government to investigate the conduct of what is said to be a great trust. Now, if we recall that direction for an investigation, it can be well said that the Senate desires to cover up its tracks or to recall the investigation it has asked one of the Departments of this Government to make. For myself, I am not willing to have it said that this body has recalled any such instruction, unless the Department of Commerce and Labor shall say to this body officially that it has made an investigation of this subject, that the Department of Justice has made an investigation of this subject, and that it is now ready and willing to have the Department of Justice proceed.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I am in favor of the substitute resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. I am not in favor of going along with the proposition of withdrawing our instructions; and I say—and I think it must be obvious to everyone—a mere few words of talk or an interchange of letters between the Departments would permit this case to proceed and the Department of Commerce and Labor to make its investigation and then make its report to the body which directed it to investigate the subject.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the Senate did not consult the wishes of the Department of Commerce and Labor before passing the original resolution, and, it having come to the knowledge of the Senate that another Department has made a complete investigation, I do not think we ought to delay by consulting the Department of Commerce and Labor as to its wishes in regard to the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, when I first raised the question which has led to this now somewhat protracted debate I did not know the personal facts stated by the Senator from North Dakota. I was totally ignorant that this corporation was interfering with the politics of that State. In any such fight I would stand with the Senator or any other honest man against the interference, by any corrupt power, with the politics of any American Commonwealth. I consider that that is a far larger question than the one to which the Senator by his resolution has compelled us as Senators to give our attention; because if it be true that this trust or any other financial power has invaded the politics of a State, it has committed a greater crime against our institutions than it has an offense against our laws.

So my sympathy as well as my reason is thoroughly and heartily in accord with these views. If the Senator is opposed corruptly by this or any other great corporation; if it is flooding his State with money to defeat him, I hope the Senator will win such a fight and that the people will rebuke and chastise such a criminal assault on their purity. There are too many interferences in politics by corporations which, for their own purposes, wish to control public office; too many instances where States are flooded with money by men and corporations outside a State and inside a State for the purpose of corrupting primaries, conventions, and elections. And wherever this infamy is attempted it should be defeated and those who practice it punished. I did not know the facts stated when I first raised the question, but yet if I had known them, and as heartily as I do sympathize with that fight and every other similar fight, I should still have raised this question, because it has not yet been made clear to me why it is that the Department of Justice of all Departments, charged under the law with and created for the purpose of administering justice, openly avowing it has the facts at hand upon which to proceed, should hesitate because of some vague courtesy which has no justification in law and no foundation in practice. We are confronted with an extraordinary situation upon that part of the debate, Mr. President. We are told that a Department of the Government, charged with the execution of the laws, having in its possession the facts upon which it says it might successfully proceed, and it being its duty to proceed under the laws, nevertheless puts some sort of a courtesy above its duty.

I do not even agree with my friend, the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], that the Department of Justice has a right to stand on its dignity and say, "We will wait until another Department of the Government completes an investigation, which can not hinder and may actually help our discharge of our duties under the law." So the question the Senator from North Dakota has raised by his resolution, much as I sympathize with the situation he has presented, and of which I knew nothing when I first raised this question, submits a consideration which the Senate can not possibly overlook. We might all be very anxious to further the Senator's purpose. I have no doubt that most Senators here at least would be aroused to the point of resistance of any invasion of the politics of a State by a corporation like this, as much as the Senator or as much as I; but the Senator has compelled us to come up against the proposition of stopping an investigation which the Senator himself has admitted can not possibly hurt this prosecution and which very possibly may help. The Senate is compelled to say whether or not a Department of this Government shall obey the law or obey some mysterious courtesy. I can not possibly be for the Senator's resolution and must vote for the motion of the Senator from Oregon, which I think is unquestionably the proper motion to be made under the circumstances.

Mr. FULTON. Just a word, Mr. President, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] that the motion I made to refer the resolution to a committee would operate to delay the institution of the contemplated suit. In the first place, I think the Senator is mistaken in his contention that the Department of Justice can not proceed unless we either rescind this resolution that was passed some months ago authorizing the investigation, or the Department of Commerce and Labor in some way indicates to the Department of Justice that it will not be offended should the suit be brought.

Mr. President, the Senator has not told us in direct terms that the Department of Justice takes any such position, nor has he told us in direct terms that the Department of Commerce and Labor objects to the Department of Justice proceeding. Indeed, he states that the Department of Commerce and Labor will be very glad to have the Department of Justice take action in this matter.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is my own opinion.

Mr. FULTON. That is his opinion. That being true, is it possible that there is such a vast difference between the various Departments of this Administration that they can not come together and reach an adjustment and understanding? Must we accredit ambassadors to each one of these Departments to negotiate understandings between one another? It is a most extraordinary proposition, Mr. President, that two Departments of this Government, each equally anxious that a certain line of policy shall be pursued, can not get together, having the power to pursue it, unless we shall by some manner of negotiation pave the way for them to come to an amicable understanding.

Mr. President, that is not the condition. I do not question the Senator's sincerity and earnestness in this matter. I know he is very earnest about it. But look what he asks us to do. He asks us, without any official information from the Department of Commerce and Labor touching the extent to which it has gone, touching the state now of its investigations, to relieve it of investigations which we directed it to make some time ago by resolution of this body, and cause it, right perhaps in the very midst of its investigation, to cease. The Senator can not tell us—no one here can tell us—what the effect of that would be. For one I am not willing to consent to that. I insist, so far as my voice and vote shall go, that the resolution shall go to a committee, and that the committee investigate and report to us. If it is proper under the circumstances and conditions to rescind the former resolution, we will rescind it. I am not to be hurried into that by any suggestion that the Department of Justice is hanging here, waiting with bated breath until we shall take this step, because I know, as every Senator must know, that the Department of Justice is directed by law to prosecute these suits when it has information that the law has been violated, and it will not be deterred from taking such a course because some other Department may possibly be investigating along similar lines.

Mr. BRYAN. As I understand, the question before the Senate is on the substitute of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] to commit the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BRYAN. Before that motion was made I understood the Senator from Illinois to offer a resolution that the Department of Commerce and Labor be directed to report the result of its investigation of this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois offered a substitute.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. Then, the question is on the substitute?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not on the substitute, as the motion to commit takes precedence.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

Mr. President, I hope the motion to commit will not prevail, because it seems to me that now is the time to kill this proposition, if we are going to kill it. If it were in order at this time I should offer for the pending resolution a substitute, providing that "the office of the Attorney-General of the United States be requested to report to the Senate whether the Attorney-General's office is delaying the prosecution of the International Harvester Company because of the investigation of said company by the Department of Commerce and Labor." Then we should have it officially reported to the Senate whether the Department of Justice is acting in pursuance of the antitrust law or not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator from Florida does not mean to question the statement of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. No. But I think an official report from the Attorney-General's office is better for the guidance of the Senate than somebody's word to the Senator who offered the resolution. A further reason why, in my judgment, the motion to commit should not be adopted is because the substitute offered by the Senator from Illinois, that the Department of Commerce and Labor be directed to report the result of its investigation, is important, inasmuch as on the 17th of December, 1906, a resolution was passed in the Senate directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make an early investigation. If such a resolution were passed, we could see exactly just where the Department of Commerce and Labor stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] to commit the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT LANDER, WYO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4064) to provide for a term of the United States circuit and district courts at Lander, Wyo., to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is a short bill I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CACHE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider at the present time the bill (H. R. 12412) to authorize the Missouri and North Arkansas Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Cache River, in Woodruff County, Ark. It will require but a few seconds to dispose of it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 110) for the erection of an addition or extension to the post-office and court-house at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such additional land as he may deem necessary, and to cause to be erected an addition or extension to the post-office and the court-house at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., for the use and accommodation of the Government offices, the cost of such additional land and extension or addition not to exceed $175,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALISBURY, N. C.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3835) increasing the limit of cost for a public building at Salisbury, N. C., to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey demands the regular order. The bill will go to the Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9210) to authorize the court of county commissioners of Geneva County, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River, at or near the Jones Old Ferry, in Geneva County, Ala.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey demands the regular order. Concurrent or other resolutions are in order.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the morning business is closed, I desire to have indefinitely postponed the bill (S. 2725) to extend the time for completion of the building of dam across the Mississippi River, near the village of Bermidji, Beltrami County, Minn., it being a bill that came over from the House this morning in response to the request of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 2725) to extend the time for completion of the building of dam across the Mississippi River, near the village of Bermidji, Beltrami County, Minn., returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be postponed indefinitely.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 74.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish to say that there was some misunderstanding about the form of the resolution among some Senators yesterday and I have modified it so as to express what was intended, and also changing it in another particular. I ask leave to submit the modified resolution instead of the original; and that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes a modification of his resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the words "nineteen hundred and seven," strike out "and report to the Senate whether in said matter the Hon. Alston G. Dayton, judge of said court, has exceeded his jurisdiction or power in granting said restraining order," and in line 12, after the word "and," insert "said committee is directed."

Mr. CULBERSON. Now I ask that the restraining order——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the resolution be read as it will read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the modified resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be and is hereby, directed to speedily investigate and inquire into all of the circumstances connected with the issuance of a restraining order in the case of Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, plaintiff, against John Mitchell and others, defendants, in the United States circuit court for the northern district of West Virginia, on October 24, 1907, and said committee is directed to report to the Senate whether any additional legislation is necessary for the protection of the rights and privileges of workingmen; and if so, to report such legislation without delay. And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution, said committee or subcommittee is hereby authorized to sit at such times and places as may suit its convenience, to administer oaths and affirmations, take testimony, send for persons and papers, employ stenographers to report its hearings, and to have them printed, such hearings to be submitted by said committee to the Senate, and all necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I will ask the Senator from Texas if the first statement about the subcommittee ought not to be taken out?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think not.

Mr. LODGE. We authorize the committee to make the inquiry.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator will pardon me, I took the criticism of the resolution yesterday to be to the effect of that the Senator now makes. I have had occasion to examine it with the force of the Secretary of the Senate, and I find it has been customary, at least since the 13th of May, 1890, for the Senate, by resolution, to instruct committees or subcommittees to investigate.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], as reported in the RECORD this morning—I did not hear him distinctly yesterday—thought that the resolution directed a subcommittee to report to the Senate. That was not the intention of the resolution, and I have modified it in that respect so as to make it clear that the report to the Senate must be made by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure that where you authorize them to take testimony it is common to authorize them to take it either by full committee or by subcommittee. I know that was the phrase in the Brownsville resolution. But I was not aware that it was common to direct a subcommittee to investigate and inquire.

Mr. CULBERSON. I read from one resolution here, that of May 13, 1890, as follows:

That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, either by full committee or subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee, to continue during the recess of Congress the investigation authorized by the resolution of March 1, 1887.

I have ten or a dozen resolutions couched in similar language, showing that the Senate has directed the committee or a subcommittee to make investigation, and that the full committee shall report.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that there is very much in the distinction that I intend to draw, but I think it is customary and proper that a committee charged with an investigation should have the power from the Senate to carry on that investigation through a subcommittee. I think that is a very necessary provision.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think that is all this resolution does, and I will ask——

Mr. LODGE. I think the resolution is entirely appropriate on the second page, but on the first page it seemed to me that at best it was surplusage.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask that the resolutions to which I have invited attention, running from 1890 down to 1906, be printed in the RECORD in conjunction with what I am saying, so that we may have what, at least, has been the practice of the Senate during that time. I think it would be very well to have them printed.

Mr. LODGE. I do not of course question the precedents the Senator has brought forward, but it seems to me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Mr. Jones of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Dawes on the 3d instant, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs to continue the investigations authorized by the resolution of March 1, 1887, reported it with an amendment.

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the said resolution; and the reported amendment having been agreed to, the resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, 1. That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed either by full committee or subcommittee or committees, as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee to continue during the recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolution of March 1, 1887, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolution, and in the pursuance of such investigation to visit the several Indian reservations and the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, or any reservation where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

"2. That said committee, or subcommittee, shall have power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses under oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at such place as they may determine.

"And the necessary and proper expenses incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee."

[Senate Journal, May 13, 1890, p. 299.]

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. Manderson December 10, 1890, instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into the condition of the Indian tribes, and

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof appointed by its chairman, is hereby instructed to inquire into the condition of the Indian tribes in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and elsewhere; the cause leading to the occupation of Indian reservations by United States troops; whether the treaties with said Indians have been fulfilled; to investigate fully the facts concerning the arms and munitions of war in the possession of said Indians, and what steps, legislative and executive, are needed to disarm them and prevent supply of such armament hereafter; also to inquire whether the care and control of Indians living in the tribal relation should be transferred to any other Department of the Government, and to report to the Senate, by bill or otherwise. Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, examine witnesses under oath, employ a stenographer and interpreter, and sit during the session or the recess of the Senate at such times and places as the committee may determine; and the actual and necessary expenses of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee."

[Journal of the Senate, February 27, 1891, p. 182.]

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Pettigrew June 23, 1897, instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to continue the investigations authorized by the resolutions of May 13, 1890, and February 27, 1891, reported it with an amendment.

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the said resolution; and the reported amendment having been agreed to, the resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, as now constituted, either by full committee or such subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee to continue during the coming recess of Congress, the investigations authorized by the resolutions of May 13, 1890, and February 27, 1891, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolutions, and in the pursuance of such investigations to visit, if it be deemed advisable, the several Indian reservations, Indian schools supported in whole or in part by the Government, and the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, or any reservation where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

"Second. That said committee or subcommittee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses under oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at such place or places as they may determine; and the necessary and proper expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee."

[Senate Journal, July 13, 1897, p. 153.]

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make an investigation of internal-revenue and customs matters, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer and such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

[Senate Journal, June 29, 1898, p. 383. The above resolution was agreed to July 7, 1898, p. 400.]

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make an investigation of internal-revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and to report from time to time to the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

[Senate Journal, February 28, 1899, p. 165. The above resolution was agreed to March 2, 1899, p. 180.]

Mr. THURSTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized, either by full committee or such subcommittees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, during the coming recess of Congress to visit and investigate the several Indian reservations, Indian schools supported in whole or in part by the Government, or any reservations where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

"Second. That said committee or subcommittee shall have the power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses under oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at such place or places as they may determine, to employ stenographers and such clerical assistance as may be deemed advisable; and the necessary and proper expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee."

[Senate Journal, May 18, 1900, p. 372. The above resolution was agreed to May 24, 1900, p. 391.]

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make an investigation of internal-revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

[Senate Journal, February 26, 1901, p. 220. The above resolution was agreed to February 28, 1901, p. 233.]

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported the following resolution, which was refererd to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is instructed to sit during the recess of the Senate, at such times and places as may suit the convenience of said committee or subcommittee, to consider the question of additional legislation to regulate interstate commerce and to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates of freights and fares, and to acquire further information as to interstate commerce, including violations or evasions of the antirebate law and the devices and methods by which evasions are accomplished, and including refrigerator and other private-car systems, industrial railway tracks, switching charges, and the like. Said committee or subcommittee is authorized to employ experts, administer oaths, take testimony, send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer to report its hearings and to have them printed, which hearings shall be sent, as soon as printed, to each member of the Senate. Said committee shall make a full report of its proceedings hereunder by bill or otherwise within ten days after the meeting of the next Congress. And all necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

[Senate Journal, February 28, 1905, p. 285. The above resolution was amended and agreed to March 2, 1905, p. 307.]

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, in conjunction with the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives, all matters pertaining to the copyright laws, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings; and that the committee be authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate, and to have such hearings printed, and that all expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that it is better form at all events, even if it has been usual before, to have it the other way—that the resolution should read: "That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and inquire," and then further on, "is directed to report." Now——

Mr. CULBERSON. The only object——

Mr. LODGE. The second clause——

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to get through with this matter before 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. I am only saying that in the second clause you may provide that the committee may carry on this work through a subcommittee. That is, I think, entirely proper.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am only asking that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. We are not adopting it. I am asking its reference now, and I should like to get through with it before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I wish to say just a word, and I will not occupy the time so as to prevent action. As I was the Senator who first called attention to the words, I desire to say that the sole thought in my mind was that the language of the resolution as it was then framed would authorize a subcommittee to report, which I did not think was a proper proceeding. But the words which the Senator now proposes to put in, that the committee shall report, entirely removes the criticism which I proposed to make upon the language of the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. It was never intended by the resolution, of course, that a subcommittee should make a report to the Senate. Such a proposition as that would have been absurd.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. Now, I ask——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CULBERSON. In one minute. I ask unanimous consent that the papers I send to the desk——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's resolution has not been referred. Without objection, the resolution will be referred.

Mr. LODGE. No; Mr. President, I think there is considerable objection to that reference.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that a copy of the restraining order and the bill of complaint in the case referred to in the resolution be printed as a Senate document, and I have no objection that the statement which I understand the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] has shall be printed with these papers as a Senate document.

Mr. SCOTT. For the present I object, because there is no time, as I understand it, before 2 o'clock, and I have a statement that I want to make and a paper to be filed. The Senator can not expect me to do it in a minute and a half.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. What became of the resolution? I ask that it be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I object. If that question is to come to a vote, before it does come to a vote I want to have this statement read and made a part of the papers which the Senator from Texas asked to have printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2982.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 73, as follows:

SEC. 149. Whoever, with intent to defraud, shall falsely make, forge, counterfeit, or alter any obligation or other security of the United States shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than fifteen years.

SEC. 150. Whoever shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be made, forged, or counterfeited, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting, any note in imitation of, or purporting to be in imitation of, the circulating notes issued by any banking association now or hereafter authorized and acting under the laws of the United States; or whoever shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited note, purporting to be issued by any such association doing a banking business, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited; or whoever shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely altering, any such circulating notes, or shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish as true, any falsely altered or spurious circulating note issued, or purporting to have been issued, by any such banking association, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than fifteen years.

SEC. 151. Whoever, having control, custody, or possession of any plate, stone, or other thing, or any part thereof, from which has been printed, or which may be prepared by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of printing, any obligation or other security of the United States, shall use such plate, stone, or other thing, or any part thereof, or knowingly suffer the same to be used for the purpose of printing any such or similar obligation or other security, or any part thereof, except as may be printed for the use of the United States by order of the proper officer thereof; or whoever by any way, art, or means shall make or execute, or cause or procure to be made or executed, or shall assist in making or executing any plate, stone, or other thing in the likeness of any plate designated for the printing of such obligation or other security; or whoever shall sell any such plate, stone, or other thing, or bring into the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign place, any such plate, stone, or other thing, except under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury or other proper officer, or with any other intent, in either case, than that such plate, stone, or other thing be used for the printing of the obligations or other securities of the United States; or whoever shall have in his control, custody, or possession any plate, stone, or other thing in any manner made after or in the similitude of any plate, stone, or other thing, from which any such obligation or other security has been printed, with intent to use such plate, stone, or other thing, or to suffer the same to be used in forging or counterfeiting any such obligation or other security, or any part thereof; or whoever shall have in his possession or custody, except under authority from the Secretary of the Treasury or other proper officer, any obligation or other security made or executed, in whole or in part, after the similitude of any obligation or other security issued under the authority of the United States, with intent to sell or otherwise use the same; or whoever shall print, photograph, or in any other manner make or execute, or cause to be printed, photographed, made, or executed, or shall aid in printing, photographing, making, or executing any engraving, photograph, print, or impression in the likeness of any such obligation or other security, or any part thereof, or shall sell any such engraving, photograph, print, or impression, except to the United States, or shall bring into the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign place any such engraving, photograph, print, or impression, except by direction of some proper officer of the United States; or whoever shall have or retain in his control or possession, after a distinctive paper has been adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury for the obligations and other securities of the United States, any similar paper adapted to the making of any such obligation or other security, except under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury or some other proper officer of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both.

SEC. 152. Whoever, with intent to defraud, shall pass, utter, publish, or sell, or attempt to pass, utter, publish, or sell, or shall bring into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, with intent to pass, publish, utter, or sell, or shall keep in possession or conceal with like intent any falsely made, forged, counterfeited, or altered obligation or other security of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than fifteen years.

SEC. 153. Whoever, without authority from the United States, shall take, procure, or make, upon lead, foil, wax, plaster, paper, or any other substance or material, an impression, stamp, or imprint of, from, or by the use of any bedplate, bedpiece, die, roll, plate, seal, type, or other tool, implement, instrument, or thing used or fitted or intended to be used in printing, stamping, or impressing, or in making other tools, implements, instruments, or things to be used or fitted or intended to be used in printing, stamping, or impressing any kind or description of obligation or other security of the United States now authorized or hereafter to be authorized by the United States, or circulating note or evidence of debt of any banking association under the laws thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 154. Whoever, with intent to defraud, shall have in his possession, keeping, custody, or control, without authority from the United States, any imprint, stamp, or impression, taken or made upon any substance or material whatsoever, of any tool, implement, instrument, or thing, used, or fitted or intended to be used, for any of the purposes mentioned in the preceding section; or whoever, with intent to defraud, shall sell, give, or deliver any such imprint, stamp, or impression to any other person, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 155. Whoever shall buy, sell, exchange, transfer, receive, or deliver any false, forged, counterfeited, or altered obligation or other security of the United States, or circulating note of any banking association organized or acting under the laws thereof, which has been or may hereafter be issued by virtue of any act of Congress, with the intent that the same be passed, published, or used as true and genuine, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 156. Whoever, without authority from the United States, shall secrete within, embezzle, or take and carry away from any building, room, office, apartment, vault, safe, or other place where the same is kept, used, employed, placed, lodged, or deposited by authority of the United States, any bedpiece, bedplate, roll, plate, die, seal, type, or other tool, implement, or thing used or fitted to be used in stamping or printing, or in making some other tool or implement used or fitted to be used in stamping or printing, any kind or description of bond, bill, note, certificate, coupon, postage stamp, revenue stamp, fractional currency note, or other paper, instrument, obligation, device, or document, now or hereafter authorized by law to be printed, stamped, sealed, prepared, issued, uttered, or put in circulation on behalf of the United States; or whoever, without such authority, shall so secrete, embezzle, or take and carry away any paper, parchment, or other material prepared and intended to be used in the making of any such papers, instruments, obligations, devices, or documents; or whoever, without such authority, shall so secrete, embezzle, or take and carry away any paper, parchment, or other material printed or stamped, in whole or part, and intended to be prepared, issued, or put in circulation on behalf of the United States as one of the papers, instruments, or obligations hereinbefore named, or printed or stamped, in whole or part, in the similitude of any such paper, instrument, or obligation, whether intended to issue or put the same in circulation or not, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 157. Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, with intent to defraud, shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit any bond, certificate, obligation, or other security in imitation of, or purporting to be an imitation of, any bond, certificate, obligation, or other security of any foreign government, issued or put forth under the authority of such foreign government, or any treasury note, bill, or promise to pay issued by such foreign government, and intended to circulate as money, either by law, order, or decree of such foreign government; or whoever shall cause or procure to be so falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or shall knowingly aid or assist in making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, any such bond, certificate, obligation, or other security, or any such treasury note, bill, or promise to pay, intended as aforesaid to circulate as money, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

SEC. 158. [Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, knowingly and with intent to defraud, shall utter, pass, or put off, in payment or negotiation, any false, forged, or counterfeited bond, certificate, obligation, security, treasury note, bill, or promise to pay, mentioned in the section last preceding, whether the same was made, altered, forged, or counterfeited within the United States or not, shall be fined not more than $3,000 and imprisoned not more than three years.]

SEC. 159. [Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, with intent to defraud, shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be so falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or shall knowingly aid and assist in the false making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting of any bank note or bill issued by a bank or corporation of any foreign country, and intended by the law or usage of such foreign country to circulate as money, such bank or corporation being authorized by the laws of such country, shall be fined not more than $2,000, and imprisoned not more than two years.]

SEC. 160. Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall utter, pass, put off, or tender in payment, with intent to defraud, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited bank note or bill, as mentioned in the preceding section, knowing the same to be so false, forged, altered, and counterfeited, whether the same was made, forged, altered, or counterfeited within the United States or not, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than one year.

SEC. 161. [Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall have in his possession any false, forged, or counterfeit bond, certificate, obligation, security, treasury note, bill, promise to pay, bank note, or bill issued by a bank or corporation of any foreign country, with intent to utter, pass, or put off the same, or to deliver the same to any other person with intent that the same may thereafter be uttered, passed, or put off as true, or shall knowingly deliver the same to any other person with such intent, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than one year.]

SEC. 162. [Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except by lawful authority, shall have control, custody, or possession of any plate, stone, or other thing, or any part thereof, from which has been printed or may be printed any counterfeit note, bond, obligation, or other security, in whole or in part, of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, or shall use such plate, stone, or other thing, or knowingly permit or suffer the same to be used in counterfeiting such foreign obligations, or any part thereof; or whoever shall make or engrave, or cause or procure to be made or engraved, or shall assist in making or engraving any plate, stone, or other thing, in the likeness or similitude of any plate, stone, or other thing designated for the printing of the genuine issues of the obligations of any foreign government, bank, or corporation; or whoever shall print, photograph, or in any other manner make, execute, or sell, or cause to be printed, photographed, made, executed, or sold, or shall aid in printing, photographing, making, executing, or selling, any engraving, photograph, print, or impression in the likeness of any genuine note, bond, obligation, or other security, or any part thereof, of any foreign government, bank, or corporation; or whoever shall bring into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, any counterfeit plate, stone, or other thing, or engraving, photograph, print, or other impressions of the notes, bonds, obligations, or other securities of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. As the next section, section 163, is in italics, I ask that it be passed over without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over, as requested by the Senator from Idaho.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 164. Whoever shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any coin or bars in resemblance or similitude of the gold or silver coins or bars which have been, or hereafter may be, coined or stamped at the mints and assay offices of the United States, or in resemblance or similitude of any foreign gold or silver coin which by law is, or hereafter may be, current in the United States, or are in actual use and circulation as money within the United States; or whoever shall pass, utter, publish, or sell, or attempt to pass, utter, publish, or sell, or bring into the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign place, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeit, with intent to defraud any body politic or corporate, or any person or persons whomsoever, or shall have in his possession any such false, forged, or counterfeited coin or bars, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, with intent to defraud any body politic or corporate, or any person or persons whomsoever, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and imprisoned not more than ten years.

SEC. 165. Whoever shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any coin in the resemblance or similitude of any of the minor coins which have been, or hereafter may be, coined at the mints of the United States; or whoever shall pass, utter, publish, or sell, or bring into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign place, or have in his possession any such false, forged, or counterfeited coin, with intent to defraud any person whomsoever, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than three years.

SEC. 166. Whoever fraudulently, by any art, way, or means, shall deface, mutilate, impair, diminish, falsify, scale, or lighten, or cause or procure to be fraudulently defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened, or willingly aid or assist in fraudulently defacing, mutilating, impairing, diminishing, falsifying, scaling, or lightening, the gold or silver coins which have been or which may hereafter be, coined at the mints of the United States, or any foreign gold or silver coins which are by law made current or are in actual use or circulation as money within the United States, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof; or whoever shall pass, utter, publish, or sell, or attempt to pass, utter, publish, or sell, or bring into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign place, knowing the same to be defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened, with intent to defraud any person whomsoever, or shall have in his possession any such defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened coin, knowing the same to be defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened, with intent to defraud any person whomsoever, shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

SEC. 167. If any of the gold or silver coins struck or coined at any of the mints of the United States shall be debased, or made worse as to the proportion of fine gold or fine silver therein contained, or shall be of less weight or value than the same ought to be, pursuant to law, or if any of the scales or weights used at any of the mints or assay offices of the United States shall be defaced, altered, increased, or diminished through the fault or connivance of any officer or person employed at the said mints or assay offices, with a fraudulent intent; or if any such officer or person shall embezzle any of the metals at any time committed to his charge for the purpose of being coined, or any of the coins struck or coined at the said mints, or any medals, coins, or other moneys of said mints or assay offices at any time committed to his charge, or of which he may have assumed the charge, every such officer or person who commits any of the said offenses shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years.

SEC. 168. Whoever, except as authorized by law, shall make or cause to be made, or shall utter or pass, or attempt to utter or pass, any coins of gold or silver or other meal, or alloys of metals, intended for the use and purpose of current money, whether in the resemblance of coins of the United States or of foreign countries, or of original design, shall be fined not more than $3,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 169. Whoever, not lawfully authorized, shall make, issue, or pass, or cause to be made, issued, or passed, any coin, card, token, or device in metal, or its compounds, which may be intended to be used as money for any 1-cent, 2-cent, 3-cent, or 5-cent piece, now or hereafter authorized by law, or for coins of equal value, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

SEC. 170. [Whoever, without lawful authority, shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall willingly aid or assist in making, any die, hub, or mold, or any part thereof, either of steel or plaster, or any other substance whatsoever, in likeness or similitude, as to the design or the inscription thereon, of any die, hub, or mold designated for the coining or making of any of the genuine gold, silver, nickel, bronze, copper, or other coins of the United States, that have been or hereafter may be coined at the mints of the United States; or whoever, without lawful authority, shall have in his possession any such die, hub, or mold, or any part thereof, or shall permit the same to be used for or in aid of the counterfeiting of any of the coins of the United States hereinbefore mentioned, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the conditions under which section 170 and section 171 were reported were rather unusual, and I think there should be made manifest in the RECORD the reasons which actuated the committee in reporting those sections as they appear in the bill.

Sections 170, 171: In the cases of United States v. Keller and others, charged, among other things, with having in their possession dies for counterfeiting the coin of some of the South American Republics, the district court for the southern district of New York held that to constitute an offense under section 2 of the act of February 10, 1891, it was not only necessary to show the possession of the dies by the defendants, but also that they had them in possession "with intent to fraudulently or unlawfully use" them in making counterfeit coin. The court further points out the doubt which arises as to the construction of the section because of the arrangement of the language thereof.

I would say here that the court was referring to the existing law upon the subject, and it was this criticism by the court which actuated the committee in making such changes in existing law as are embodied in sections 170 and 171, as reported:

While the criticism of the court is directed against section 2 of that act, it also applies, in a less degree, to section 1, which relates to the making of dies, etc., for counterfeiting the coin of the United States.

To remove this doubt the committee has transposed the language of both sections, and has dropped from each section the words "with intent to fraudulently use the same," and by transposing and repeating the words "without lawful authority." The committee believes that a person who has in his possession dies which may be used in counterfeiting any coin should be required to show that his possession is lawful, and that the Government should not be required to prove that he has them in possession "with the intent to fraudulently and unlawfully" use them for counterfeiting.

The purpose of the change made by the committee is obvious. It shifts the burden upon the party found in possession of those contraband articles; in other words, it is not the intention of the law that any man should have in his possession the means of counterfeiting the coin of this country or of a foreign country, because there can be no possible circumstances under which an individual would be in the possession of those implements with a lawful intent.

I think it proper at this time to make this explanation both as to section 170 and section 171, they both being inclosed in brackets, and to allow these remarks to apply to section 171 as well.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 171. [Whoever, within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, without lawful authority, shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall willingly aid or assist in making, any die, hub, or mold, or any part thereof, either of steel or of plaster, or of any other substance whatsoever, in the likeness or similitude, as to the design or the inscription thereon, of any die, hub, or mold, designated for the coining of the genuine coin of any foreign government; or whoever, without lawful authority, shall have in his possession any such die, hub, or mold, or any part thereof, or shall conceal, or knowingly suffer the same to be used for the counterfeiting of any foreign coin, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

SEC. 172. Whoever, within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall bring therein, from any foreign country, or shall have in possession with intent to sell, give away, or in any other manner use the same, any business or professional card, notice, placard, token, device, print, or impression, or any other thing whatsoever, in the likeness or similitude as to design, color, or the inscription thereon, of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign country that have been or hereafter may be issued as money, either under the authority of the United States or under the authority of any foreign government, shall be fined not more than $100. But nothing in this section shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing and publishing of illustrations of coins and medals, or the making of the necessary plates for the same, to be used in illustrating numismatic and historical books and journals and the circulars of legitimate publishers and dealers in the same.

SEC. 173. All counterfeits of any obligation or other security of the United States or of any foreign government, or counterfeits of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign government, and all material or apparatus fitted or intended to be used, or that shall have been used, in the making of any such counterfeit obligation or other security or coins hereinbefore mentioned, that shall be found in the possession of any person without authority from the Secretary of the Treasury or other proper officer to have the same, shall be taken possession of by any authorized agent of the Treasury Department and forfeited to the United States, and disposed of in any manner the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. Whoever having the custody or control of any such counterfeits, material, or apparatus shall fail or refuse to surrender possession thereof upon request by any such authorized agent of the Treasury Department shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the committee has added to existing law the last paragraph found in section 173, because it has been found difficult sometimes to secure possession of counterfeit coins in the possession of banks and officers, detective officers especially. So there was no adequate provision of law under which a demand could be made and enforced for the delivery of counterfeit coin that had come in the regular process of business into the hands of innocent parties. It was considered that the Government should have the means of obtaining possession for the purpose of destruction of such coins so as to take away the opportunity for their reissuance either by accident or intent, and so that they might not be again put in circulation.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 174. [The several judges of courts established under the laws of the United States and United States commissioners may, upon proper oath or affirmation, within their respective jurisdictions, issue a search warrant authorizing any marshal of the United States, or any other person specially mentioned in such warrant, to enter any house, store, building, boat, or other place named in such warrant, in which there shall appear probable cause for believing that the manufacture of counterfeit money, or the concealment of counterfeit money, or the manufacture or concealment of counterfeit obligations or coins of the United States or of any foreign government, or the manufacture or concealment of dies, hubs, molds, plates, or other things fitted or intended to be used for the manufacture of counterfeit money, coins, or obligations of the United States or of any foreign government, or of any bank doing business under the authority of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, or of any bank doing business under the authority of any foreign government, or of any political division of any foreign government, is being carried on or practiced, and there search for any such counterfeit money, coins, dies, hubs, molds, plates, and other things, and for any such obligations, and, if any such be found, to seize and secure the same and to make return thereof to the proper authority; and all such counterfeit money, coins, dies, hubs, molds, plates, and other things, and all such counterfeit obligations so seized shall be forfeited to the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, rather a material change has been made by this section in existing law by the committee. In line 21, after the word "warrant," in the existing law, the words "in the daytime only" are found. The committee in this report has stricken those words from the statute, so that the warrant may authorize the search to be made either during the daytime or during the night; in other words, at any time. The present restriction upon the officers has been found in many instances in practical experience to afford an opportunity for parties having these contraband articles in their possession to escape with them because the search could not be made except in the daytime. The committee saw no good reason why a party who was in the very act of violating the law should not be apprehended and the contraband articles in his possession taken at any time by due process of law.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 175. In all cases where the charter of any corporation which has been or may be created by act of Congress has expired or may hereafter expire, if any director, officer, or agent of the corporation, or any trustee thereof, or any agent of such trustee, or any person having in his possession or under his control the property of the corporation for the purpose of paying or redeeming its notes and obligations, shall knowingly issue, reissue, or utter as money, or in any other way knowingly put in circulation any bill, note, check, draft, or other security purporting to have been made by any such corporation whose charter has expired, or by any officer thereof, or purporting to have been made under authority derived therefrom, or if any person shall knowingly aid in any such act, he shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. But nothing herein shall be construed to make it unlawful for any person, not being such director, officer, or agent of the corporation, or any trustee thereof, or any agent of such trustee, or any person having in his possession or under his control the property of the corporation for the purpose hereinbefore set forth, who has received or may hereafter receive such bill, note, check, draft, or other security, bona fide and in the ordinary transactions of business, to utter as money or otherwise circulate the same.

SEC. 176. [It shall not be lawful to design, engrave, print, or in any manner make or execute, or to utter, issue, distribute, circulate, or use any business or professional card, notice, placard, circular, handbill, or advertisement in the likeness or similitude of any circulating note or other obligation or security of any banking association organized or acting under the laws of the United States which has been or may be issued under any act of Congress, or to write, print, or otherwise impress upon any such note, obligation, or security, any business or professional card, notice or advertisement, or any notice or advertisement of any matter or thing whatever. Whoever shall violate any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would again call attention to the fact that the committee have, I believe in every instance, stricken out the provisions in existing law for the payment of any part of the fine to the informer; have stricken out the minimum punishment, as in the section under consideration; have made what was the maximum punishment in existing law the maximum in this section; have added a six months' term of imprisonment, and have made the punishment a "fine" instead of a "penalty."

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 177. Whoever shall mutilate, cut, deface, disfigure, or perforate with holes, or unite or cement together, or do any other thing to any bank bill, draft, note, or other evidence of debt, issued by any national banking association, or shall cause or procure the same to be done, with intent to render such bank bill, draft, note, or other evidence of debt unfit to be reissued by said association, shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 178. It shall not be lawful to design, engrave, print, or in any manner make or execute, or to utter, issue, distribute, circulate, or use, any business or professional card, notice, placard, circular, handbill, or advertisement, in the likeness or similitude of any bond, certificate of indebtedness, certificate of deposit, coupon, United States note, Treasury note, gold certificate, silver certificate, fractional note, or other obligation or security of the United States which has been or may be issued under or authorized by any act of Congress heretofore passed or which may hereafter be passed; or to write, print, or otherwise impress upon any such instrument, obligation, or security any business or professional card, notice, or advertisement, or any notice or advertisement of any matter or thing whatever. Whoever shall violate any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $500.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would direct attention to the fact that the committee have enlarged the scope of existing law by adding after the word "note," in line 21, the words "gold certificate, silver certificate," because at the time of the passage of existing law those issues were not in existence.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 179. No person shall make, issue, circulate, or pay out any note, check, memorandum, token, or other obligation for a less sum than $1, intended to circulate as money or to be received or used in lieu of lawful money of the United States; and every person so offending shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

CHAPTER EIGHT.

OFFENSES AGAINST THE POSTAL SERVICE.

SEC. 180. Whoever, without authority from the Postmaster-General, shall set up or profess to keep any office or place of business bearing the sign, name, or title of post-office, shall be fined not more than $500.

SEC. 181. Whoever, being concerned in carrying the mail, shall collect, receive, or carry any letter or packet, or cause or procure the same to be done, contrary to law, shall be fined not more than $50, or imprisoned not more than thirty days, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that the committee have substituted the word "fined" in each of these sections where it applies for the word "penalty;" in other words, they have made the punishment a fine instead of a penalty.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator why, in section 180, the first clause of the original section, as now written in the law, is omitted?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is merely a transposition of language to conform to the general rule that has uniformly been applied. All of these sections, where it is possible, commence with the word "whoever" instead of "every person who." The Senator will see that in the original law, in section 3829 of the Revised Statutes, the first words are, "The Postmaster-General shall establish post-offices at all such places on post-roads."

Mr. STONE. That is what I am asking about.

Mr. HEYBURN. The section as reported by the committee covers that principle exactly, but the language is transposed to conform to a general principle of construction. I think the Senator will find that nothing has been omitted in point of principle.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean that the language in the first clause of section 3829 is incorporated, even in substance and effect, in the new section 180?

Mr. HEYBURN. To this extent and purpose: The existing law prescribes specifically that—

The Postmaster-General shall establish post-offices at all such places on post-roads established by law as he may deem expedient, and he shall promptly certify such establishment to the Sixth Auditor.

Down to that point it is administrative law and has nothing to do with penal statutes. The penal portion of existing law in that section commences with the words "And every person who, without authority."

Mr. STONE. Yes; I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have simply carried forward the penal clause in existing law, and we have allowed the administrative portion of the existing law to take its proper place in the revision of administrative law.

Mr. STONE. Has it taken its place?

Mr. HEYBURN. It will. That is not reported yet. It will be found in the administrative law when it is reported under the head of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. STONE. Such a provision of law ought to be incorporated somewhere.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I think, Mr. President, the Senator will realize the fact that it is purely an administrative provision.

Mr. STONE. I do recognize that.

Mr. HEYBURN. And had no place originally in a penal statute.

Mr. STONE. I think that is correct; but I say that provision of law ought not to be eliminated.

Mr. HEYBURN. It will not be eliminated. It will be found in the report of administrative law which will come in under its proper title.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 182. Whoever shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same by regular trips or at stated periods over any post route which is or may be established by law, or from any city, town, or place, to any other city, town, or place, between which the mail is regularly carried, or whoever shall aid or assist therein shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as prohibiting any person from receiving and delivering to the nearest post-office, postal car, or other authorized depository for mail matter, any mail matter properly stamped.

SEC. 183. [Whoever, being the owner, driver, conductor, master, or other person having charge of any stagecoach, railway car, steamboat, or other vehicle or vessel, shall knowingly convey or knowingly permit the conveyance of any person acting or employed as a private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, and actually in possession of the same for the purpose of conveying them, contrary to law, shall be fined not more than $150.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the changes in that section are so obvious as to need little explanation. Except that the committee has rearranged the punishment, the change in the section consists only in transposing the language, in omitting redundant matter, and in substituting fine and imprisonment, or both, in lieu of a penalty of $150.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 184. Whoever shall transmit by private express or other unlawful means, or deliver to any agent thereof, or deposit or cause to be deposited at any appointed place, for the purpose of being so transmitted, any letter or packet, shall be fined not more than $50.

SEC. 185. [Whoever, being the owner, driver, conductor, master, or other person having charge of any stagecoach, railway car, steamboat, or conveyance of any kind which regularly perform trips at stated periods on any post route, or from any city, town, or place to any other city, town, or place between which the mail is regularly carried, and which shall carry, otherwise than in the mail, any letters or packets, except such as relate to some part of the cargo of such steamboat or other vessel, or to some article carried at the same time by the same stagecoach, railway car, or other vehicle, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be fined not more than $50.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the section being in brackets, I am called upon to explain the purpose of the committee. "This section has been rewritten for the purpose of omitting redundant matter, and broadened so as to make it apply to a conveyance of any kind." The enumeration of the offenses in the existing law did not meet the conditions that exist at this time. "At present the section provides a penalty of $100 for a violation of its provisions by the owner, and of $50 by the driver, etc., of any coach, car, boat, etc. This has been changed to a fine of not more than $50."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I rise simply for the purpose of directing the attention of the Senator to a certain consideration. I do not know whether or not it is met by other provisions of law, but I notice that this provision limits the letter which can be carried by any person engaged by a common carrier, a conductor or other employee of that kind, to a communication which relates to some part of the particular cargo carried at the same time—that is, on the same train. I am satisfied if that is now the law or shall become the law, it must necessarily be continually violated by the railroad companies. It would be absolutely impossible for them to carry on their business if that was enforced to the letter. It is continually necessary for railroad officials to send up and down the line by their conductors or other messengers communications relating to the business of the road; communications not only connected with the freight on that particular train, but with any other business. It is done daily, hundreds and thousands of times daily; and I presume everybody recognizes that it is absolutely necessary in the conduct of their business that they should have the liberty so to do.

I should like to hear the Senator on that subject, whether or not he considers that that section is sufficiently broad to permit the sending of such communications by railroad officials to their employees or officers as are necessary daily, and many times daily.

Mr. HEYBURN. The committee were impelled to report the section as it is before us because it was existing law. There is much force in the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that the liberty granted to the carrier with reference to carrying letters and communications is perhaps not adapted to existing conditions. Perhaps at the time of the enactment of the statute it was. But the committee did not feel, under the circumstances, that they would be justified in attempting to change a law governing the transmission of such mail matter without the matter being referred to a standing committee of Congress for consideration. So we have reported the existing law, and I think perhaps the section had better go over under the general rule.

Mr. BACON. Yes. Before we leave the subject, however, I desire to call attention to the language in order that it may be seen in this connection how very drastic it is. After a general prohibition against the carrying of any letter or any communication of any kind by any officer of the railroad, such as a conductor or any other officer of like character, it says "except such as relate to some part of the cargo of such steamboat or other vessel, or to some article carried at the same time by the same stagecoach, railway car, or other vehicle." That would make it utterly impossible to send any communication up and down by an officer or employee of the road unless it related to some article in the same car, which by liberal construction, I presume, might mean the same train, as that upon which the messenger went.

I think, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho, that the section ought to lie over, in order that it may be properly amended. It is certainly ill-adapted to the business necessities of the present day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest that if the existing law is to be amended, it perhaps should be more properly done by independent legislation and let it come before the appropriate committee of this body.

Mr. BACON. Here is a section which relates to that particular subject, and the easiest way is to amend this particular section.

Mr. HEYBURN. The difficulty arises from the fact that if we open up to amendment the existing law as it is reported by the committee, the probabilities are that the temptation to amend a great many sections of existing law might involve the consideration of this bill in difficulties which would be embarrassing. I would suggest to the Senator that it is rather a dangerous door to open.

Mr. BACON. Yesterday I called the attention of the Senator to the fact that they have, in a great many instances, I think with perfect propriety, enlarged or restricted, as the case may be, various provisions of the law so as to adapt them to present conditions. The Senator will certainly recall the fact that that has been done times beyond number. This is particularly a case where a few words could be interpolated in this section so as to give the railroads, or any other common carrier, but the railroad companies particularly—because they are more directly engaged in business that requires communications of that kind—the right to send up and down their road communications relating strictly to their own business. They can not wait for the mail, and frequently it is not feasible to telegraph. But if the suggestion of the Senator is carried out and the section goes over, that matter will more properly come up when we again reach this section.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it go over for further consideration.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt of the absolute necessity that something should be done in this respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 186. Whoever shall carry any letter or packet on board any vessel which carries the mail, otherwise than in such mail, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be fined not more than $50 or imprisoned not more than one month, or both.

SEC. 187. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to prohibit the conveyance or transmission of letters or packets by private hands without compensation, or by special messenger employed for the particular occasion only.

SEC. 188. Whoever, not being connected with the letter-carrier branch of the postal service, shall wear the uniform or badge which may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, to be worn by letter carriers, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 189. [It shall be unlawful to paint, print, or in any manner to place upon or attach to any steamboat or other vessel, or any car, stage coach, vehicle, or other conveyance, not actually used in carrying the mail, the words "United States mail," or any words, letters, or characters of like import; or to give notice, by publishing in any newspaper or otherwise, that any steamboat or other vessel, or any car, stage coach, vehicle, or other conveyance, is used in carrying the mail, when the same is not actually so used; and every person who shall violate, and every owner, receiver, lessee, or managing operator thereof, who shall cause, suffer, or permit the violation of any provision of this section, shall be liable, and shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. It will be observed that the latter part of the section as reported is entirely in italics. The purpose of the committee in adding this clause to the existing law will be found in the notes to section 189:

Section 3979, Revised Statutes, punishes the person who paints upon or attaches to any car or boat the words "United States mail," when the same is not engaged in carrying the mail. But this section does not reach the person who directs or causes it to be done. For this reason the committee has broadened the section so that it will reach those in authority and responsible for the unlawful use of such words.

Mr. BACON. I think that it is a proper addition; and it illustrates what I have just said with regard to the proposition in connection with a preceding section, that the committee did properly take the opportunity to correct manifest imperfections in the law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize the desirability of taking advantage of this consideration of the law for the purpose of making such corrections as would obviate the necessity of independent legislation, and it is not my intention to oppose it. I only want to keep it within the strictest bounds consistent with the proper performance of our duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 190. Whoever shall tear, cut, or otherwise injure any mail bag, pouch, or other thing used or designed for use in the conveyance of the mail, or shall draw or break any staple or loosen any part of any lock, chain, or strap attached thereto with intent to rob or steal any such mail, or to render the same insecure, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

SEC. 191. [Whoever shall steal, purloin, or embezzle any mail bag or other property in use by or belonging to the Post-Office Department, or shall appropriate any such property to his own or any other than its proper use, or shall convey away any such property to the hindrance or detriment of the public service, shall be fined not more than $200 or imprisoned not more than three years or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. This section is in brackets.

The change in this section consists in the omission of the words "for any lucre, gain, or convenience," wherever they occur, so that the mere stealing, embezzling, or purloining shall constitute an offense, irrespective of the intent with which the property is taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 192. Whoever shall steal, purloin, embezzle, or obtain by any false pretense, or shall aid or assist in stealing, purloining, or embezzling, or obtaining by any false pretense any key suited to any lock adopted by the Post-Office Department and in use on any of the mails or bags thereof, or any key to any lock box, lock drawer, or other authorized receptacle for the deposit or delivery of mail matter; or whoever shall knowingly and unlawfully make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause to be unlawfully made, forged, or counterfeited, any such key, or shall have in his possession any such mail lock or key with the intent unlawfully or improperly to use, sell, or otherwise dispose of the same, or to cause the same to be unlawfully or improperly used, sold, or otherwise disposed of; or whoever, being engaged as a contractor or otherwise in the manufacture of any such mail lock or key, shall deliver or cause to be delivered, any finished or unfinished lock or key used or designed for use by the Department, or the interior part of any such lock, to any person not duly authorized under the hand of the Postmaster-General and the seal of the Post-Office Department, to receive the same, unless the person receiving it is the contractor for furnishing the same or engaged in the manufacture thereof in the manner authorized by the contract, or the agent of such manufacturer, shall be fined not more than $500, and imprisoned not more than ten years.

SEC. 193. Whoever shall forcibly break into or attempt to break into any post-office, or any building used in whole or in part as a post-office, with intent to commit in such post-office, or building, or part thereof, so used, any larceny or other depredation, shall be fined not more than $1,000, and imprisoned not more than five years.

SEC. 194. [Whoever, by violence, shall enter a post-office car, or any apartment in any car, steamboat, or vessel, assigned to the use of the mail service, or shall willfully or maliciously assault or interfere with any postal clerk in the discharge of his duties in connection with such car, steamboat, vessel, or apartment thereof, or shall willfully aid or assist therein, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this section has been enlarged so as to protect postal clerks employed on vessels. They are not included within the provisions of existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 195. [Whoever shall steal, take, or abstract, or by fraud or deception obtain, from or out of any mail, post-office, or station thereof, or other authorized depository for mail matter, or from a letter or mail carrier, any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or shall abstract or remove from any such letter, package, bag, or mail, any article or thing contained therein, or shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy any such letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein; or whoever shall buy, receive, or conceal, or aid in buying, receiving, or concealing, or shall unlawfully have in his possession, any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein, which has been so stolen, taken, embezzled, or abstracted, as herein described, knowing the same to have been so stolen, taken, embezzled, or abstracted; or whoever shall take any letter, postal card, or package, out of any post-office or station thereof, or out of any authorized depository for mail matter, or from any letter or mail carrier, or which has been in any post-office or station thereof, or other authorized depository, or in the custody of any letter or mail carrier, before it has been delivered to the person to whom it was directed, with a design to obstruct the correspondence, or to pry into the business or secrets of another, or shall open, secrete, embezzle, or destroy the same, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. I read from the report:

This section is derived from three sections of the Revised Statutes. These sections enumerate the various articles or things the taking of which is made punishable. This enumeration has been omitted and the section changed so as to punish the taking of anything from the mail by one not authorized to do so. The remaining amendments are clearly indicated by the words italicized.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Does that include the taking of money?

Mr. HEYBURN. Any thing that is in the mail.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that the language—"any thing"—would cover what is the object of almost breaking into mail matter—the money or the money order or whatever it is? Does the Senator think the language "any thing" will cover it?

Mr. HEYBURN. The language is more comprehensive. The language is "shall abstract or remove from any such letter, package, bag, or mail any article or thing contained therein."

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that includes money?

Mr. HEYBURN. The committee seemed to think it was sufficiently comprehensive to include anything that was contained in the mail.

Mr. HALE. Why not put in the word "money?"

Mr. HEYBURN. The enumerations existing in the three sections of existing law are not entirely comprehensive; and having undertaken to enumerate the articles and failed to enumerate them all, it was thought best to use such general language as would include any thing that might be in the mail.

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that the Senator is right, but it struck me in reading over the language that possibly the taking of money might not be included in the words "any thing."

Mr. HEYBURN. It says "any article or thing."

Mr. HALE. "Any article or thing." It is not an article, precisely; it is not a thing; but it is currency; it is money. Does the Senator think it is ample without putting in the word "money?" I have not examined it, but it struck me, on reading it over, it might possibly be open to that objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. The committee thought it would be amply comprehensive.

Mr. HALE. They thought it would cover it?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 196. [Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any department of the postal service, shall unlawfully detain, delay, or open any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail intrusted to him or which shall come into his possession, and which was intended to be conveyed by mail, or carried or delivered by any carrier, messenger, agent, or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or station thereof established by authority of the Postmaster-General; or shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy any such letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail; or shall steal, abstract, or remove from any such letter, package, bag, or mail, any article or thing contained therein, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

SEC. 197. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any department of the postal service, shall improperly detain, delay, embezzle, or destroy any newspaper, or permit any other person to detain, delay, embezzle, or destroy the same, or open, or permit any other person to open, any mail or package of newspapers not directed to the office where he is employed; or whoever shall open, embezzle, or destroy any mail or package of newspapers not being directed to him, and he not being authorized to open or receive the same; or whoever shall take or steal any mail or package of newspapers from any post-office or from any person having custody thereof, shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 198. [Whoever shall assault any person having lawful charge, control, or custody of any mail matter, with intent to rob, steal, or purloin such mail matter or any part thereof, or shall rob any such person of such mail or any part thereof, shall, for a first offense, be imprisoned not more than ten years, and for a subsequent offense shall be imprisoned twenty-five years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. It seems proper to call attention to the change made in this section.

This section is made up of two sections of the Revised Statutes. Under those sections, one committing robbery of the mails, or attempting to do so, and in doing or attempting to do which makes use of a dangerous weapon, is subject to imprisonment for life. This language has been omitted and the maximum imprisonment which may be imposed has been reduced to twenty-five years.

It was thought by the committee, under the changed conditions since the original enactment of that statute and in accordance with the general system of uniform punishment which the committee have adopted, that it was better to establish a maximum punishment.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the Senator, the law as it now stands on the statute books draws a distinction between the grade of the offense where a man commits a simple assault and where in committing the assault he uses a deadly weapon. Am I correct?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I have not had time to read it over, although it is before me.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. The committee welded together the two sections, each covering a different grade of the offense, and undertook to make the maximum punishment sufficiently severe and comprehensive to apply to both of them.

Mr. BACON. I shall not ask to have any change made in the report of the committee in that particular, but I very gravely doubt the wisdom of that change. We have the same distinction running through all the criminal law, in which there is simply a maximum punishment which would cover all grades of offenses, but in which there is by a specification of the different grades an emphasis put upon the fact that a higher grade should have a higher punishment. We have simple assault and we have assault with intent to kill or assault with a deadly weapon, as expressed in some jurisdictions. The law as it now stands meant that there should be emphasized the fact that it is a very different offense, the making of a simple assault without a deadly weapon and the assault with a deadly weapon.

I do not know whether to suggest that the section be laid over. I think it is a matter of some importance. In the years to come people will not refer back to the original statute to see what changes have been made, and it will simply rest upon the statute book in the form now proposed, without any specific attention being drawn to the enormity of the latter offense, to-wit, the offense where one makes the assault, for the purpose indicated here, with a deadly weapon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Under the existing statute the difference between the two offenses consists in the one case of having succeeded by the assault in making the robbery and in the other case in not having succeeded The test of the offense is the assault with the intent to commit the robbery. So far as I am concerned, I can see no good reason for making a distinction between the two classes of offenses.

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me an equally serious offense where a mail carrier has been assaulted with the intent to rob him of the mail, whether the robbery succeeds or not. So the committee has simply molded the two sections into one and made it an offense for any person to assault another who has the lawful charge or control or custody of any mail matter with intent to rob him, whether the robbery succeeds or not.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the Senator now, each of the two offenses has the same element of the murderous weapon, and the difference is whether he succeeds in the one and fails in the other. Am I correct?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; not to that extent. The first section, section 5472, provides—

Any person who shall rob any carrier, agent, or other person intrusted with the mail, of such mail, or any part thereof, shall be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than five years and not more than ten years.

That is where the robbery has been completed.

And if convicted a second time of a like offense, or if, in effecting such robbery the first time the robber shall wound the person having custody of the mail, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of dangerous weapons, such offender shall be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for the term of his natural life.

The next section which has been incorporated with it provides:

Any person who shall attempt to rob the mail by assaulting the person having custody thereof, shooting at him or his horse, or threatening him with dangerous weapons, and shall not effect such robbery, shall be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than two years and not more than ten years.

It seems to me there is no reason for making a distinction between a case where the robbery is not effected and where it is.

Mr. BACON. I had the opportunity while the Senator was on the floor to read the sections, and I think the distinction which I endeavored to draw in the first instance is correctly drawn. I will read section 5472 for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not I am correct; and it will be seen that there is an effort made to draw a distinction between the offense committed in the way of an ordinary assault and where it is sought to be perpetrated by a deadly weapon.

Any person who shall rob any carrier, agent, or other person intrusted with the mail, of such mail, or any part thereof, shall be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than five years and not more than ten years.

It will be observed that in that clause there is nothing said about a deadly weapon.

And if convicted a second time of a like offense, or if, in effecting such robbery the first time, the robber shall wound the person having custody of the mail, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of dangerous weapons, such offender shall be punishable at hard labor for the term of his natural life.

There is the clear distinction. It will be observed that the latter clause is not limited entirely to the case of a second offense. The increased punishment is given in the case of the second offense in any event, and then it goes on to say that even if it be the first offense, if it be attempted with a murderous weapon, there shall be the increased punishment. While it is true that the section as reported by the committee gives a punishment ample to cover this increased grade of offense, at the same time there is lost what I think is important—the specific statement and emphasis of the difference which the law recognizes in the case of simple assault and the case where it is effected or attempted to be effected by a murderous weapon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from Georgia is correct about that, and that the words in the old statute to which he calls attention now ought to be reinserted in the amended statute.

Mr. BACON. I think so. I suggest to the Senator to let the section lie over.

Mr. HEYBURN. My opinion would be that there was no occasion for changing the law as it was written. The Commission in many instances had reported changes, and we were specifically directed by the law under which we were acting to consider the report of the Commission, so that in some instances (I will not say against our own judgment) we adopted the report of the Commission where had we been acting upon first intention we would not have done so. This is perhaps one of those cases.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question. I have not been able to pay much attention to the bill. Others have given it much better attention than I could have done. To my mind the old section 5472——

Mr. BACON. And also the succeeding one.

Mr. HALE. And section 5473 are much better by their classification and gradation and distinction of punishment than the new section.

Mr. BACON. I think so.

Mr. HALE. Now, what method shall we resort to in order to put in the old sections instead of the new?

Mr. HEYBURN. We are now considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole for amendment, and it would be entirely appropriate and proper to submit a motion——

Mr. HALE. To restore the old sections?

Mr. HEYBURN. To restore the old sections in lieu of section 198; and perhaps that would be the proper thing to do.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Georgia, who has given so much attention to this matter, thinks that it should be done, I hope he will make that motion.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to the Senator that the section as reported has some of the other usual amendments, which are an improvement upon the general style, the substitution of the word "Whoever," and so on. So I would ask the Senators who are really in the charge and care of the bill to redraft it, simply making such necessary amendments as may be deemed proper for the purpose of style, retaining the present provision classifying and grading these offenses.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask that the section be passed over, and we will recur to it.

Mr. HALE. That will cover it entirely.

Mr. HEYBURN. We will present it in that form later.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 199. [Whoever shall willfully injure, tear down, or destroy any letter box, pillar box, lock box, lock drawer, or other receptacle established or approved by the Postmaster-General for the safe deposit of matter for the mail or for delivery, or any lock or similar device belonging or attached thereto, or any letter box or other receptacle designated or approved by the Postmaster-General for the receipt or delivery of mail matter on any rural free-delivery route, star route, or other mail route, or shall break open the same; or shall willfully injure, deface, or destroy any mail matter deposited in any letter box, pillar box, lock box, lock drawer, or other receptacle established or approved by the Postmaster-General for the safe deposit of matter for the mail or for delivery; or shall willfully take or steal such matter from or out of any such letter box, pillar box, lock box, lock drawer, or other receptacle, or shall willfully and maliciously assault any letter or mail carrier, knowing him to be such, while engaged on his route in the discharge of his duty as such carrier, or shall willfully aid or assist in any offense defined in this section, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. This section is taken from three distinct acts of Congress, the first represented by section 3869 of the Revised Statutes, the second by section 5466 of the Revised Statutes, and the latter part of it by section 3 of the act of the 21st of April, 1902, as amended on the 3d of March, 1903. So those provisions were scattered through rather an inconvenient number of volumes for reference. The committee have brought them together and molded them into a form, retaining the substance and intent of the original law. No change has been made in existing law.

SEC. 200. [Whoever, having taken charge of any mail, shall voluntarily quit or desert the same before he has delivered it into the post-office at the termination of the route or to some known mail carrier, messenger, agent, or other employee in the postal service authorized to receive the same, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

SEC. 201. [The master or other person having charge or control of any steamboat or other vessel passing between ports or places in the United States, arriving at any such port or place where there is a post-office, shall deliver to the postmaster or at the post-office within three hours after his arrival, if in the daytime, and if at night, within two hours after the next sunrise, all letters and packages brought by him or within his power or control and not relating to the cargo, addressed to or destined for such port or place, for which he shall receive from the postmaster two cents for each letter or package so delivered, unless the same is carried under a contract for carrying the mail; and for every failure so to deliver such letters or packages, the master or other person having charge or control of such steamboat or other vessel, shall be fined not more than $150.]

SEC. 202. Whoever shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage, horse driver, or carrier, or car, steamboat, or other conveyance or vessel carrying the same, shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say that the section just read and that the one preceding it, while in brackets, contain no change except that the appliances for carrying the mails now in existence are included. Such appliances were not in existence at the time of the enactment of the statute.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho the construction of the prior section, 201. He was engaged at the time, and I did not interrupt him. Does the Senator understand that that section permits the captain of a steamboat to bring mail that is not stamped, and requires him simply to deliver it to the nearest post-office within a certain time after the arrival, and to receive remuneration therefor? Is that the construction?

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator refer to lines 15, 16, and 17 of section 201?

Mr. BACON. Well, it begins back a little further than that, in lines 10 and 11.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the existing statute——

Mr. BACON. I know it is.

Mr. HEYBURN. And I have no doubt it has been construed. I think I could refer the Senator to some cases of construction. It is merely intended to cover conditions that arise only occasionally.

Mr. BACON. Yes. The only reason why I asked the question is that I suppose, without having the time now to compare the two, it is in harmony with the preceding section, which prohibits the carrying of mail by any person unless duly authorized under contract or where the letters have been stamped. I presume they are in harmony, though I have not time now to compare the two.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator will find it is rather within the exception of the preceding section.

Mr. BACON. And thereby harmonious?

Mr. HEYBURN. And thereby not within the limitation.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 203. Whoever, being a ferryman, shall delay the passage of the mail by willful neglect or refusal to transport the same across any ferry shall be fined not more than $100.

SEC. 204. All letters or other mailable matter conveyed to or from any part of the United States by any foreign vessel, except such sealed letters relating to such vessel or any part of the cargo thereof as may be directed to the owners or consignees of the vessel, shall be subject to postage charge, whether addressed to any person in the United States or elsewhere, provided they are conveyed by the packet or other ship of a foreign country imposing postage on letters or other mailable matter conveyed to or from such country by any vessel of the United States; and such letters or other mailable matter carried in foreign vessels, except such sealed letters relating to the vessel or any part of the cargo thereof as may be directed to the owners or consignees, shall be delivered into the United States post-office by the master or other person having charge or control of such vessel when arriving, and be taken from the United States post-office when departing, and the postage justly chargeable by law paid thereon; and for refusing or failing to do so, or for conveying such letters or other mailable matter, or any letters or other mailable matter, intended to be conveyed in any vessel of such foreign country, over or across the United States, or any portion thereof, the party offending shall be fined not more than $1,000.

Mr. BACON. I think that section is open to the same criticism as that which is made in regard to the restrictions put upon railroads and other land or interior carriers, in the fact that it is too narrow in its exception. It is a matter which relates entirely to foreign vessels, but the exception is limited to communications relative to that particular vessel or a part of the cargo of that vessel. It seems to me that anything which relates to the business of that company ought to be within the exception. But without an opportunity to fully reflect upon it now, I think the section had better be passed over, so that we can take it up in connection with the other matter which we will subsequently consider, as to what class of communications can be transported by railroad companies and other inland carriers.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 205. No vessel arriving within a port or collection district of the United States shall be allowed to make entry or break bulk until all letters on board are delivered to the nearest post-office, and the master or other person having charge or control thereof has signed and sworn to the following declaration before the collector or other proper customs officer:

I, A. B., master ———, of the ———, arriving from ———, and now lying in the port of ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have to the best of my knowledge and belief delivered to the post-office at ——— every letter and every bag, packet, or parcel of letters which was on board the said vessel during her last voyage, or which were in my possession or under my power or control.

And any master or other person having charge or control of such vessel who shall break bulk before he has delivered such letters shall be fined not more than $100.

SEC. 206. [Whoever shall use or attempt to use in payment of postage, any canceled postage stamp, whether the same has been used or not; or shall remove, attempt to remove, or assist in removing the canceling or defacing marks from any postage stamp, or the superscription from any stamped envelope, or postal card, that has once been used in payment of postage, with the intent to use the same for a like purpose, or to sell or offer to sell the same, or shall knowingly have in possession any such postage stamp, stamped envelope, or postal card, with intent to use the same, or shall knowingly sell or offer to sell any such postage stamp, stamped envelope, or postal card, or use or attempt to use the same in payment of postage; or whoever unlawfully and willfully shall remove from any mail matter any stamp attached thereto in payment of postage; or shall knowingly use or cause to be used in payment of postage, any postage stamp, postal card, or stamped envelope, issued in pursuance of law, which has already been used for a like purpose; shall, if he be a person employed in the postal service, be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both; and if he be a person not employed in the postal service, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the purpose of the committee in combining the five sections of existing law under the one section, 206, must be obvious. It was as much as for any other reason to avoid repeating the offense as to the two classes of employees. It was found better form and more convenient to describe the offense in one section and then specify the punishment separately for the two classes of employees.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I notice the four sections that are taken and the intent of which is sought to be embodied in section 206 have a very marked gradation of punishment according to the enormity of the offense. For instance, in section 3922 the punishment is by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than six months. In section 3923, which provides for attempting to use in payment any postage stamp that has already been subjected to use, the penalty is only $50, indicating that in framing these laws originally the relative magnitude of the offense was considered when the punishment was measured out.

My only criticism about embodying it all in one section is as to the lighter penalties imposed in the original sections. Perhaps the committee felt that it could not adhere to the gradations of the old law. They are practically abolished and all of the offenses provided for in these four sections are in a way concentrated, and the punishment is made the same for the lighter offense under the original statute as for the heavier offense.

Does the Senator think that the provisions here for only two kinds of punishment, much heavier than those in the old sections, are not too severe and do not exceed the punishments provided in the old statute?

Mr. HEYBURN. It will be observed that we have uniformly abolished minimum fines and punishments and have recommended only maximum fines and punishments, leaving it to the discretion of the court to impose in each case even the very lightest fine or the lightest punishment.

There are four distinct classes of punishment provided by the existing law from which this section is drawn. In section 3922 the punishment is by a fine of not more than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than six months. Those are the maximums for the first offense described. For the second offense described the penalty is $50 arbitrarily, with no discretion to govern the court in case the offense was shown to be without moral turpitude. In the third class of offenses the punishment is not less than one year. There is a minimum punishment, and the court could not sentence the party found guilty to less than a year, when perhaps the circumstances might be exceptional, and the jury perhaps taking that into consideration would acquit a party who is really guilty, but not in their judgment so guilty as to be subjected to an arbitrary fine or to an imprisonment of not more than three years.

Mr. HALE. Not less than one nor more than three.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; not less than one year. Now, having abolished those minimum punishments and leaving it to the discretion of the court to take into consideration each case on its own merits, it was deemed best to recommend such a maximum punishment as would be amply sufficient to cover all of each of the classes of offenses and yet leave it within the power of the court to administer a proper punishment.

Mr. HALE. I think, Mr. President, that so far as I am concerned that explanation is entirely satisfactory. The clause making whatever the amount of money or the term of imprisonment maximum and leaving it in the discretion of the judge accomplishes all that was done in the old statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that section 3923, which provides for a penalty of only $50, is substantially embodied also in sections 3924 and 3925, which provide for precisely the same offense—a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each offense. Section 3923 makes it an offense for any person to use or attempt to use in payment of postage any stamp which has been used before. Section 3924 makes it an offense, among others, for any person employed in the Post-Office Department to make use of such a stamp, while section 3925 makes it an offense for any person not employed in the Post-Office Department to commit any of the offenses included in section 3924.

So really we have the punishment in section 3925 far exceeding the punishment provided in section 3923 for precisely the same offense; and by embodying all the sections in one we have made the whole thing consistent, as I think.

Mr. HEYBURN. The next section can be passed over under the understanding that entirely new sections will not be taken up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The section will be passed over.

Mr. HEYBURN. My attention is called to the fact that while section 207 is largely redrafted, yet it is not within the rule of the sections we pass over. So it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 207. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any branch of the postal service, shall make, or assist in making, or cause to be made, a false return, statement, or account to any officer of the United States, or shall make, assist in making, or cause to be made, a false entry in any record, book, or account, required by law or the rules or regulations of the Post-Office Department to be kept in respect of the business or operations of any post-office or other branch of the postal service, for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation or the compensation of the postmaster or any employee in a post-office; or whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any post-office or station thereof, shall induce, or attempt to induce, for the purpose of increasing the emoluments or compensation of his office, any person to deposit mail matter in, or forward in any manner for mailing at, the office where such postmaster or other person is employed, knowing such matter to be properly mailable at another post-office, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. This section is redrafted and made to meet the exigencies of existing conditions. We are advised that the change was recommended to the Commission by the Department as a result of experienced difficulty in applying the existing law, which is quite meager. It was intended to prevent——

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. The recommendation of the committee greatly enlarges the present law. The present law simply provides that—

Any postmaster who shall make a false return to the Auditor for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation, under the provisions of this or any other act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than $50 nor more than $500, or imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year, or punished by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The section here recommended by the committee makes it a penal offense to violate in a certain particular the rules of the Post-Office Department. Now, is it not going a long way for Congress to undertake to say it shall be a criminal offense to violate the rules to be established by the Post-Office Department? Ought not a criminal law to define the offense and provide the punishment? We can not tell what rules the Department might establish; and so, it strikes me, when we undertake to say that a violation of the rules of the Post-Office Department shall be a criminal offense it is a very serious matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Georgia. I am not in favor of giving to any rule or regulation of any Department of the Government, executive or administrative, the force and effect of a criminal statute. So I reserved in the committee the right, in the consideration of this bill, at all times to object to such provisions wherever they were found. I will therefore ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to speak in regard to that question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as I understand this provision, it does not come within the criticism which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] makes and to which my colleague on the committee [Mr. HEYBURN] seems to assent. The provision as suggested by the committee is:

SEC. 207. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any branch of the postal service, shall make, or assist in making, or cause to be made, a false return, statement, or account to any officer of the United States, or shall make, assist in making, or cause to be made, a false entry in any record, book, or account, required by law or the rules or regulations of the Post-Office Department to be kept in respect of the business or operations of any post-office or other branch of the postal service, etc.

The gist of the offense which is defined by that section is the making of a false entry for the purpose of fraudulently increasing the compensation of the postmaster. It would be just as great an offense against the law to make a false entry in a book which has been provided for that purpose under a regulation of the Department as it would be where the book had been provided by an express provision of law; in other words, the Post-Office Department, in providing that a certain book shall be kept, simply furnishes the occasion for the commission of the offense, and the substantive offense itself is not the violation of the regulation at all. To illustrate the difference: Suppose that the Interior Department makes a regulation that only timber of a certain size shall be cut upon a forest reserve and somebody cuts timber of another description. That is a direct violation of the regulation of the Department. But here the Post-Office Department is authorized to provide certain forms of books, and requires certain forms and kinds of books. The law says that, when that has been done, if any postmaster makes a false entry in such book he is guilty of this offense. So that—I do not know whether I make myself clear about it—the substantive offense is not the violation of the regulation, but the making of the regulation simply furnishes the opportunity for committing the offense.

Mr. HALE. The regulation is only an incident to the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Exactly.

Mr. HALE. It is not the violation of the regulation which makes it criminal, but the violation of the original statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is the violation of the law which makes it criminal.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Post-Office Department simply provides the books or declares what kind of books shall be kept. If, then, in those books a false entry is made for the purpose of increasing the postmaster's compensation, that is not a violation of the regulation, but a violation of the law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, unfortunately the language of the section on pages 106 and 107 reads, when separated from the text refering to other matters, as follows:

Shall cause to be made a false entry in any record, book, or account required by the rules and regulations of the Post-Office Department.

Now, suppose in addition to the books required by law, the Post-Office Department should make a rule or a regulation that certain other books should be kept in addition to those required by law, then the offense might be committed by making this prohibited entry in either the books required by law or the books required by such rules and regulations. It is not one of those very radical instances that come within the principle to which I have expressed an objection, but it still comes so near to it as to probably afford the basis of a prosecution for making entries in books that under the law the postmaster was not required to keep. It was for that reason I preferred that my colleague on the committee should take charge of this section.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, I desire also to call his attention to the latter part of the section. It is intended by this section, doubtless, that all mailable matter shall be mailed at the home post-office; at least that a postmaster shall not by any method attempt to induce persons distant from his post-office to mail matter at his office for the purpose of increasing his compensation. I know of an instance that occurred in my State, where the owner of a manufacturing plant became angry with the postmaster of that town and he carried his mail 6 miles farther and got another office established. Complaint of that was made by the postmaster, an inspector was sent there, and the matter was investigated.

I am afraid that the pending section containing such an addition to the present law will be likely to frequently call forth investigations by post-office inspectors and may give trouble. I therefore suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that that section had better go over. It is almost a new section and embraces very many more subjects than does the original law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think there is no objection to passing over that section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 208. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person authorized to receive the postage of mail matter, shall fraudulently demand or receive any rate of postage or gratuity or reward other than is provided by law for the postage of such mail matter, shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 209. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any branch of the postal service, and being intrusted with the sale or custody of postage stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards, shall use or dispose of them in the payment of debts, or in the purchase of merchandise or other salable articles, or pledge or hypothecate the same, or sell or dispose of them except for cash; or sell or dispose of postage stamps or postal cards for any larger or less sum than the values indicated on their faces; or sell or dispose of stamped envelopes for a larger or less sum than is charged therefor by the Post-Office Department for like quantities; or sell or dispose of, or cause to be sold or disposed of, postage stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards at any point or place outside of the delivery of the office where such postmaster or other person is employed; or induce or attempt to induce, for the purpose of increasing the emoluments or compensation of such postmaster, or the emoluments or compensation of any other person employed in such post-office or any station thereof, or the allowances or facilities provided therefor, any person to purchase at such post-office or any station thereof, or from any employee of such post-office, postage stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards; or sell or dispose of postage stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards, otherwise than as provided by law or the regulations of the Post-Office Department, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will kindly explain section 209. There seems to be a good deal of new matter introduced into it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this section, like section 207, is intended to prevent the padding of post-office reports for the purpose of affecting the classification of the office, which, of course, carries with it the salary of the postmaster.

The new matter contained in section 209 is the result of experience in the enforcement of existing law. It has been found defective against new devices that have been resorted to for the purpose of accomplishing what the existing law was intended to prevent.

It must be obvious to Senators that it is quite important that the Post-Office Department shall be protected against the padding of returns that would affect the classification of the post-office.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Idaho what he means by "new devices?"

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, originally the ingenuity of man had only reached the simpler methods of bringing about an apparent increase in the business of post-offices; but from time to time man has grown more ingenious in devising new plans of defeating the purposes of the law. In other words, postmasters have, in some instances at least, been charged with borrowing the mail from neighboring offices, or making an arrangement with some large manufacturing concern near by, who were sending out a vast number of circulars, that they should bring them over to their offices during the period when the mail was being weighed, in order that the post-office might appear to have a larger amount of business than it really had, or than was legitimately entitled to be counted on their behalf.

The purpose of this statute—if the Senator will read it he will see—was directed against that class of evasion of the law that would inure to the benefit of a postmaster and be at the expense of the Public Treasury.

Mr. KEAN. Yes; but, Mr. President, as I understand, this section is in regard to the conduct of the post-office, and not in regard to the weighing of the mails, or anything of that kind. Postmasters would not pad the mail at any time of the year except when the mails were being weighed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is the postmaster who makes this determination. It is on the report of the postmaster as to the number of stamps canceled between certain dates upon which the status of the office is based. The weighing of the mail, as the term is ordinarily used, applies to the determination of the weight of the mail in bulk for the purpose of establishing a basis for contracts for carrying the mail; but the determination of the amount of business done in a post-office is made by the postmaster under existing law; and he reports at certain times, or between certain times, as to the amount of business that has been passed through his office.

Mr. KEAN. That is done on the annual receipts.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is done on the annual receipts for certain purposes, and for certain other purposes it is done upon periodical receipts. This statute is directed to both.

I will say that these changes were recommended to the Commission whose work the committee was investigating as a result of experience in the Post-Office Department. It is doubtful if anyone other than those directly connected with the administration of the law in the Post-Office Department would be capable of sifting out, organizing, and arranging all of the necessary provisions of law requisite to meet the varying conditions they have to contend with. So the committee was very much disposed to accept suggestions coming from the administrative department of the Government in regard to these necessary details that are not of such general character that a man, however observant or intelligent he may be, would be capable of discovering and applying.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 210. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person engaged in the postal service, shall collect and fail to account for the postage due upon any article of mail matter which he may deliver without having previously affixed and canceled the special stamp provided by law, or shall fail to affix such stamp, shall be fined not more than $50.

SEC. 211. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any branch of the postal service, shall issue a money order without having previously received the money therefor shall be fined not more than $500.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask whether that section has been changed?

Mr. HEYBURN. The only change made in that section is that the words "or other person employed in any branch of the postal service" are added to the provision "whoever, being a postmaster." Under existing law a number of subordinates in post-offices are authorized to issue this class of postal orders, etc., and the statute was not broad enough, without a very liberal construction by the court, to cover all persons who might commit this offense.

Mr. KEAN. Could a postmaster be convicted under that section if his clerk committed the offense?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; for it says:

Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in any branch of the postal service—

That covers all subordinates—shall issue a money order without having previously received the money therefor shall be fined, etc.

Each of them stands upon his own responsibility, inasmuch as it must necessarily be an individual act that no one can perform for another.

Mr. KEAN. That means actual cash?

Mr. HEYBURN. The section says "issue a money order without having previously received the money therefor." The word "money" there, of course, would be held to include whatever might be lawfully received in the post-office in payment for a money order. There is an administrative law covering that.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 212. [Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use, and every article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing which is advertised or described in a manner calculated to lead another to use or apply it for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral purpose, and every written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information directly or indirectly, where, or how, or from whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore-mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, or where or by whom any act or operation of any kind for the procuring or producing of abortion will be done or performed, or how or by what means conception may be prevented or abortion produced, whether sealed or unsealed, and every letter, packet, or package, or other mail matter containing any filthy, vile, or indecent thing, device, or substance, and every paper, writing, advertisement, or representation that any article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing may, or can be, used or applied for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral purpose, and every description calculated to induce or incite a person to so use or apply any such article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing, is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post-office or by any letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, or shall knowingly take, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would say that that section is merely broadened in its scope as to the description of the articles, and I think no Senator would object to it being made as broad as language could make it. The purpose of the section is so evident that I need not say anything further about it.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 213. All matter otherwise mailable by law, upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or any postal card upon which, any delineations, epithets, terms, or language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character, or calculated by the terms or manner or style of display and obviously intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another, may be written or printed or otherwise impressed or apparent, are hereby declared non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter carrier, and shall be withdrawn from the mails under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable matter, or shall knowingly take the same or cause the same to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing of or aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 214. [No letter, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no lottery ticket or part thereof, or paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order, for the purchase of any ticket or part thereof, or of any share or chance in any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme; and no newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provision of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.]

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether under that clause an invitation to play bridge whist would be excluded from the mails? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not acquainted with the game of bridge whist, and in the absence of any knowledge as to the nature of the game am not able to answer the Senator.

Mr. KEAN. That seems to be the great gambling game of the present day, and I thought it might perhaps be excluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMERCIAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my message to the Congress on December 3, 1907, I referred to the circumstances leading to the conclusion of a new temporary commercial agreement between the United States and Germany, and said:

"The agreement and the report of the commission on which it is based will be laid before the Congress for its information.

"This careful examination into the tariff relations between the United States and Germany involved an inquiry into certain of our methods of administration which had been the cause of much complaint on the part of German exporters. In this inquiry I became satisfied that certain vicious and unjustifiable practices had grown up in our customs administration, notably the practice of determining values of imports upon detective reports never disclosed to the persons whose interests were affected. The use of detectives, though often necessary, tends toward abuse, and should be carefully guarded. Under our practice, as I found it to exist in this case, the abuse had become gross and discreditable. Under it, instead of seeking information as to the market value of merchandise from the well-known and respected members of the commercial community in the country of its production, secret statements were obtained from informers and discharged employees and business rivals, and upon this kind of secret evidence the values of imported goods were frequently raised and heavy penalties were frequently imposed upon importers who were never permitted to know what the evidence was and who never had an opportunity to meet it. It is quite probable that this system tended toward an increase of the duties collected upon imported goods, but I conceive it to be be a violation of law to exact more duties than the law provides, just as it is a violation to admit goods upon the payment of less than the legal rate of duty. This practice was repugnant to the spirit of American law and to American sense of justice. In the judgment of the most competent experts of the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor, it was wholly unnecessary for the due collection of the customs revenues, and the attempt to defend it merely illustrates the demoralization which naturally follows from a long-continued course of reliance upon such methods. I accordingly caused the regulations governing this branch of the customs service to be modified so that values are determined upon a hearing in which all the parties interested have an opportunity to be heard and to know the evidence against them. Moreover, our Treasury agents are accredited to the government of the country in which they seek information, and in Germany receive the assistance of the quasi-official chambers of commerce in determining the actual market value of goods in accordance with what I am advised to be the true construction of the law.

"These changes of regulations were adapted to the removal of such manifest abuses that I have not felt that they ought to be confined to our relations with Germany; and I have extended their operation to all other countries which have expressed a desire to enter into similar administrative relations."

For the information of the Congress, I transmit herewith the commercial agreement referred to, with its several annexes, and the report of the American Commission on which it is based.

One of the annexes to the agreement is a diplomatic note from the Secretary of State to the German ambassador at this capital, under date of May 2, 1907, reading as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, May 2, 1907.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to the commercial agreement concluded this day between this Government and the Imperial German Government, I have the honor to inform you that the President of the United States authorizes me to state that he will recommend to the Congress the enactment of an amendment of section 7 of the customs administrative act of June 10, 1890, as amended by section 32, act of July 24, 1897, so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the owner, consignee, or agent of any imported merchandise may, at the time when he shall make and verify his written entry of such merchandise, but not afterwards, make such addition in the entry to or such deductions from the cost or value given in the invoice, or pro forma invoice, or statement in form of an invoice, which he shall produce with his entry, as in his opinion may raise or lower the same to the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise at the time of exportation to the United States in the principal markets of the country from which the same has been imported; and the collector within whose district any merchandise may be imported or entered, whether the same has been actually purchased or procured otherwise than by purchase, shall cause the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise to be appraised; and if the appraised value of any article of imported merchandise subject to an ad valorem duty or to a duty based upon or regulated in any manner by the value thereof shall exceed the value declared in the entry by more than 10 per cent there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed by law on such merchandise, an additional duty of 1 per cent of the total appraised value thereof for each 1 per cent in excess of 10 per cent that such appraised value exceeds the value declared in the entry, but the additional duties shall only apply to the particular article or articles in each invoice that are so undervalued, and shall not be imposed upon any article upon which the amount of duty imposed by law on account of the appraised value does not exceed the amount of duty that would be imposed if the appraised value did not exceed the entered value, and shall be limited to 25 per cent of the appraised value of such article or articles. Such additional duties shall be construed to be penal and within the purview of sections 5292 and 5293, Revised Statutes, and sections 17 and 18, act June 22, 1874, and further shall be remitted in cases arising from unintentional or manifest clerical error; but these duties shall not be refunded in case of exportation of the merchandise nor shall they be subject to the benefit of drawback: Provided, That if the appraised value of any merchandise shall exceed the value declared in the entry by more than 35 per cent, except when arising from an unintentional or a manifest clerical error, such entry shall be held to be presumptively fraudulent, and the collector of customs may seize such merchandise and proceed as in the case of forfeiture for violation of the customs laws; and in any legal proceeding that may result from such seizure the undervaluation as shown by the appraisal shall be presumptive evidence of fraud, and the burden of proof shall be on the claimant to rebut the same, and forfeiture shall be adjudged unless he shall rebut such presumption of fraudulent intent by sufficient evidence. The forfeiture provided for in this section shall only apply to the particular article or articles which are undervalued: Provided, further, That all additional duties, penalties, or forfeitures applicable to merchandise entered by a duly certified invoice shall be alike applicable to merchandise entered by a pro forma invoice or statement in the form of an invoice. The duty shall not, however, be assessed in any case upon an amount less than the entered value."

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

ELIHU ROOT.

His Excellency BARON SPECK VON STERNBURG,

I also transmit a report of the Secretary of State, under date of January 9, 1908, explaining the purposes and scope of the proposed amendment of section 7 of the customs administrative act.

I earnestly recommend to the Congress the enactment into law of this amendment at an early date. Besides promoting harmonious relations between the contracting parties to the agreement in question, I regard the proposed legislation as a meritorious measure for the improvement of our customs administrative act, the provisions of which are applicable to importations from all countries alike.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1908.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3660. An act to establish a light and fog signal on the outer end of the breakwater, San Pedro, Cal.;

S. 3661. An act to establish a light and fog signal at or near Punta Gorda, in the State of California;

S. 3153. An act to make Monterey and Port Harford, in the State of California, subports of entry, and for other purposes;

S. 2580. An act for the relief of B. Jackman;

S. 24. An act to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service;

S. 1046. An act to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property; and

S. 3409. An act to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12412. An act to authorize the Missouri and North Arkansas Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Cache River, in Woodruff County, Ark.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3660. An act to establish a light and fog signal on the outer end of the breakwater, San Pedro, Cal.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3661. An act to establish a light and fog signal at or near Punta Gorda, in the State of California—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3153. An act to make Monterey and Port Harford, in the State of California, subports of entry, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 2580. An act for the relief of B. Jackman—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 24. An act to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1046. An act to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3409. An act to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

UNITED STATES COURTS, SALISBURY, N. C.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 456) to provide for the holding of United States district and circuit courts at Salisbury, N. C., with House amendments thereto.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That two terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of North Carolina shall be held in each and every year in the town of Salisbury, N. C., beginning, respectively, on the fourth Monday in April and October, to continue till the business is disposed of.

SEC. 2. That the clerk of the United States district and circuit courts at Statesville, N. C., shall be the clerk of the United States circuit and district courts at Salisbury, and he shall appoint a deputy clerk of said court, to reside at Salisbury, with the usual power of a deputy clerk in such cases, whose compensation shall be such proportion of the fees accruing from business done in said courts at Salisbury as shall be fixed by the judge of said court; and his actual traveling expenses and maintenance during his attendance upon the said court to be paid by the marshal of the district.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the word "Salisbury," in line 10, page 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether there is any Federal court-house in Salisbury, any place to hold this court?

Mr. WEBB. There is a Federal building. Court has been held in Salisbury for a hundred years.

Mr. PAYNE. What change does this make in the law?

Mr. WEBB. Just the sitting of the court there; that is all.

Mr. PAYNE. Simply changing the time?

Mr. WEBB. Just the sitting of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LABOR TROUBLES AT GOLDFIELD, NEV.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged resolution, reported by the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey calls up the following privileged report from the Committee on Labor, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the resolution, amended to read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the interests of the public service, a copy of the report made to him by the special commission, composed of Lawrence O. Murray, Herbert Knox Smith, and Charles P. Neil, sent by him to Goldfield, Nev., for the purpose of investigating the labor troubles in that district and to make a report concerning the same; and also such other papers relating thereto as in his judgment are material and for the better information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11701) the penal code bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the penal code bill, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday the pending question was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PAYNE. I raise the point of order that the committee was dividing on the amendment, when the point of no quorum present was raised, and the thing now in order is a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of the gentleman from New York is well taken.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be accepted for the proposition that I offered yesterday.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, it was rejected.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following:

"Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States, and whose duties require the compilation or report of statistics or information relative to the products of the soil, shall knowingly compile for issuance or issue any false statistics or information as a report of the United States shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years."

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if this amendment adds a new section?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. A new section, to follow the one just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday we legislated by way of amendment to this bill a provision which provided that if any person should give out information compiled by the Agricultural Bureau relative to the agricultural products he should be guilty and fined or imprisoned as provided therein. Now, of what value is that going to be if you allow a monopoly or trust or some combination to buy up an official and get that official who compiles these figures to make a false compilation and that false compilation is issued to the farmers of the country, for instance, that the production of cotton is greater than ever before, or that the production of tobacco is greater than ever before, or that the production of wheat is greater than ever before? Now, you provide that a man who gives out that information shall be fined and imprisoned, but you nowhere have a provision that if a man falsely compiles such information he shall be imprisoned and fined.

This is no political question, and I appeal to my friends across the aisle that you who represent the farmers do not desire to vote upon this floor that the trusts of the country may buy up some employees and get a false report issued, as was issued upon the tobacco crop two years ago. [Applause.] The Agricultural Department issued a statement saying that the production of tobacco would be greater that year than any preceding year by 25 to 30 per cent. The tobacco trust at once sent its agents throughout the country and they said to the farmers, "You want to sell your tobacco; you are pooling your tobacco and holding it back for a better price, but you don't want to do it." The farmer said, "Why not?" They said, "Look at the report of the Agricultural Department compiled by your officials which states that the production of tobacco will be greater than ever before. Tobacco will go down in price." What was the result? The farmers of my section of the State sold their tobacco, believing that report to be true, and the trust profited by that false information to the extent of many thousands of dollars, and the farmers, who love their country in peace and defend it in war, are in this way robbed of the product of their toil. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the man who gets the advance information of the statistics relative to the production of cotton, corn, or wheat can go and play the market. He is benefited by having advance information, but the man who compiles false information and sends out false statistics affects the price of the article that is grown from the earth. You call this an agricultural department. Is it to be an agricultural department or is it to be a department to be manipulated by a lot of gamblers and thieves that prey upon the farmers of the country? [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it the understanding of the gentleman from Kentucky that an officer or any official in the Agricultural Department should, for a compensation, issue or compile false statistics that there is no penalty against him?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. There is absolutely none.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman were correct in his supposition, the gentleman's amendment certainly would be very desirable—not only for the Agricultural Department, but for other Departments. But if the gentleman will look at section 119 of this bill, which we have just passed over and which is existing law, he will discover that there is a penalty.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. There is no such penalty as the gentleman seems to assert to the House. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], admitted as much to me, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] asserted it yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I say that if you have any such law as that, you had better put it in force. You had an opportunity to put it in force two years ago.

Mr. MANN. That is another matter, but the gentleman must not get led off. I will agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that the law ought to be enforced if there is a reason for it; nobody questions that. But certainly the law does cover any corrupt miscalculations of figures for any consideration, as the gentleman was charging would be the case.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I say we have no law which covers the provisions attempted to be covered by this new section, which provides that if any official or clerk in the Department falsely compiles or knowingly issues a false statement, whether for money or not, he shall be punished.

Mr. MANN. Ah, but that is where the gentleman is mistaken. If he does it for money, the law does make it a penalty.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Would not the gentleman make it as much a penalty if he falsely and willfully does it without money?

Mr. MANN. I was trying to see whether the gentleman was acting on the proposition which I understood him to state—that there was no penalty where a man accepted money for miscalculating these reports.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I say we have no such penalty as that to start on, and I say the second proposition the gentleman admits himself, that this penalty covers a species of offense——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I admit nothing.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman usually admits nothing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not admit things when it is not necessary. I do not desire to be led away from the proposition of the gentleman, which was that there was no penalty provided where a man corruptly, for a consideration, made erroneous figures, while as a matter of fact section 119, which is the existing law, expressly provides a severe penalty for that thing.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But the gentleman admits, however, that there is no provision if he corruptly and falsely does it and does it for the purpose of affecting the market—that there is no penalty that embraces that offense, when he does it without consideration. Suppose nobody paid him. Suppose he had some friend in the market whom he wanted to help, and suppose he gave information to people of that kind that these false figures would be forthcoming, and suppose those people played the market, and suppose the trust buys the products of the farm knowing the figures to be false, the country and the farmer have been hurt just as much as if this man had received pay for that. I say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], notwithstanding the fact that he does not represent an agricultural district, can see the fairness of this amendment and the need of such an amendment as this to the law. I say if this is to be called an Agricultural Department, if it is for the benefit of the agricultural people, let us surround it with every safeguard, let us throw about it every sort of element that we can which will make it true and accurate. If not, then let us do away with it. What is the use of it to the farmers of the country? If this information shall be pretendedly for them and designed for their benefit, let it be truthful, absolutely reliable. If we are to not so surround this Department, then let us destroy it altogether and have no report at all. But if we are to have one, let us have one that somebody can rely on; that the agricultural people will know is accurate, if it is for their benefit, and which is not for the manipulation of some men who want to go on the market and play it for their own gain. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized for a minute or two. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if I can get his attention, that there is no law covering the case of corrupt calculations, or erroneous calculations, willfully issued. If the gentleman will turn to the RECORD of yesterday he will find what the learned lawyer from Philadelphia who is in charge of this bill says, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no controversy with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know the gentleman has not, and he does not want to have.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES] was making a statement in support of his proposition which was erroneous, and I called his attention to the error of his statement.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I challenge that statement that my statement was erroneous, and I call upon the gentleman to read the section that he refers to, and if he does so I am sure it will demonstrate that he is in error, and not myself.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] will not claim, I trust, that if an official in the Agricultural Department is purchased by the trust that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES] referred to, and thereby makes false reports, that there is no offense under the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I take it that there is a law possibly covering it.

Mr. MANN. Possibly covering it. Why, there is section 119, which absolutely covers it. I will admit to the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But that is not exactly this case.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is the case that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] sought to cover by his amendment, or that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES] sought to cover by his amendment; but the language used by the gentleman from Kentucky went away beyond the amendment he was offering, and I was seeking to correct him so that he would not have in the RECORD statements which were erroneous, when I am sure he does not desire that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am sure he does not desire that. I think I can clear the atmosphere a little. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is seeking information, just as I seek it sometimes from him, and I hope the committee will give me attention while I read the words of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, he says this amendment is a new proposition, and it is a new proposition. It strikes at no criminal offense known to the law, but makes a crime of a certain evil.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will read what you said in a minute; just wait.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in that statement had reference to that which was covered by the new section sought to be introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand; but the only difference is in language. The effect of the two propositions is the same, so far as making the doing of the wrong a penal offense.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I want the gentleman from Tennessee to understand the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania had reference to his amendment and not to the one now pending.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The two amendments are substantially the same. You gentlemen can turn to the RECORD of yesterday, page 949, and read my amendment, and then read what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said about there being no law on the subject. Now, I will read the words of the gentleman:

> Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I say nothing about the necessity or importance of this kind of legislation. I say only it has no place in this bill for reasons heretofore stated.

Now, then—

> It brings in another class of persons for another thing not denounced as a crime, something that Congress has never legislated upon.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. True.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. "For that reason, and that reason only, I hope it will be voted down," said the gentleman. Now, he knows what the law is. I know there is no such law covering such cases, and, if so, I know that Secretary James Wilson would have prosecuted the people who made and published that corrupt statement two years ago that outraged the tobacco growers throughout the United States. There was no law then, there is no law now; yet, Mr. Chairman, in the Agricultural Department these erroneous statements were made and they were published and Secretary Wilson sent them out to the people of this country as a correct statement, and inside of about ten days or two weeks he sent out another saying they were erroneous. He went on to explain the matter to me afterwards, when I came here, and said that a poor little woman in his Department had made this expert statement. The three men who had been hired, and whom the law required to make the statement, had skulked from their duties and had sent out in the Department somewhere and brought in this unoffending little woman who had not been engaged in that kind of work and had her compile this statement, and Secretary Wilson corrected it as soon as he could.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, give me three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I am not a tobacco raiser; I never raised tobacco in my life and I am not interested in it directly. All on earth I want is, that not only the tobacco grower be protected, but the wheat grower and the corn grower and the men who raise agricultural products throughout the country and upon which the great Agricultural Department of this country operates in making these statements. The making of a false statement such as I have discussed and the sending of it out to the country is an outrage upon the people of this country and there ought to be a law making that a crime. I ask the committee seriously and with the profoundest respect for your love of country and for your farmers to adopt these four or five little words here and give the farmers of our land a protection which they have not now under the law, as the chairman in charge of this bill admits. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a fair illustration of the sort of paternalism which seems to have taken possession of our friends across the aisle. Now, this whole thing is wrong. They have no business to ask the Government to get the statistics and publish them and furnish them for the sake of aiding anybody speculating in the products of the soil——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But does not the gentleman from New York think they should be correct when they are sent out?

Mr. PAYNE. It does not make any difference whether it is for a class who compose more than half the people of the United States, namely, the farmers, or the speculators. Speculation is wrong. It injures people. It enables some to get undue advantage and obtain something for nothing. What I object to is that the Government is asked to come in in a paternal sort of way——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. And get the statistics to enable them to carry on their speculation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose I will have to do so, and I do it most gracefully.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think the Government of the United States should issue a statement that was untrue and destroy the tobacco growers, the corn growers, and wheat growers of the country? They are not speculators. They are honest men.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the great complaint is that a couple of ladies in the Department made a mistake in the computation, and that computation went out to the world, and some people sold their tobacco at a less price than they would have gotten if the computation had been true. What do you propose to do? Do you propose to send those women, whom some one says are old women, to the penitentiary for five years and have them fined $5,000? Do you propose to prosecute them and require them to defend themselves in court? It shows the utter impracticability of the whole scheme. If the Government obtains this information they should publish it as fast as they get it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is not the law.

Mr. PAYNE. And it should be accessible to all the people.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]?

Mr. PAYNE. I have only two minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will get the gentleman some more time.

Mr. PAYNE. I dislike to take the time of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is a fact that the Department of Agriculture does undertake to publish statistics, is it not?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And if they do publish them, they ought to be correct, ought they not?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And if any fellow sends out false information he ought to be punished for it?

Mr. PAYNE. That is another question. That is where you get into the realm of publishing everything for the purpose of enabling people to speculate. And you are not content to have the information come in from day to day, but you want the statistics gathered so that they can come in in one lump, and if there is a great shortage in the crop shown in that publication everybody on this floor and everywhere else knows that instead of the price going up normally, to correspond with the shortage of the crop, it goes up by leaps and bounds and with five or six times the addition that would naturally come to it; but if you had them published from day to day as the statistics came in it would be a natural, normal movement in the price instead of this great advance to the detriment of the people of the country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But that is not the question. The question is, if they publish statistics ought they not to be honest statistics?

Mr. PAYNE. I am simply illustrating the folly of you gentlemen on the other side striving to make this Government entirely a paternal Government to watch over the interests of particular classes in this country, or the different people in this country. And you find this difficulty at every point. You must bind somebody by $5,000 fine and five years' imprisonment in order to carry out your paternalistic ideas.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I have not yielded to anybody.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] proceeds upon false premises. He proceeds on the idea that this amendment is for the purpose of gathering information. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his party is the party that put into effect the gathering of the information. Now, the purpose of this amendment is to make it true.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11701, and had come to no resolution thereon.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve all points of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I will call the bill up for consideration to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

PERMANENT AND INDEFINITE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I make a privileged report and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 180.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to furnish for the use of the House the following information:

First. Statement of appropriations for permanent specific and indefinite objects, giving titles and dates of acts of appropriations and references to statutes.

Second. Statement of appropriations for permanent specific and indefinite objects proposed to be repealed by H. R. 14656, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and the expenditures therefrom during the fiscal years 1906 and 1907.

Third. Statement of appropriations for permanent specific and indefinite objects not repealed by H. R. 14656, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and the expenditures therefrom during the fiscal years 1906 and 1907.

Fourth. Whether in his opinion said H. R. 14656 should be enacted, with or without amendment.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the matter of asking the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether a bill ought to be passed or not. I do not think that is a privileged matter, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it is a privileged matter to ask a Department whether Congress ought to pass a particular bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that I think the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is well taken, but it has been the practice for several years to pass resolutions of this character asking for such information, and the Secretary of the Treasury has invariably complied with the request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRICK. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Indiana explain to the House what the bill is that this resolution asks the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury on.

Mr. BRICK. It is the bill (H. R. 14656) pending before the Committee on Appropriations, for the repeal of certain permanent appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman to have the bill read, so that the House may know what it is. There is no information given in the resolution as to what is in the bill.

Mr. BRICK. I think I can explain it without having to take considerable time. This resolution simply asks for information from the Department that shall go before the Committee on Appropriations in the consideration of this bill 14656, to come later on.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Your resolution asks the opinion of an executive officer. I do not think that the membership of the House wants the opinion; but we certainly do want to know on what that opinion is asked; and I must insist on the bill being read before the request for unanimous request is granted.

Mr. BRICK. Very well; I will ask that the bill to which the resolution refers be read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14656) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations.

Be it enacted, etc., That all laws heretofore made whereby definite or indefinite sums of money have been permanently appropriated from the General Treasury for specific or general objects, except so far as they provide appropriations for sinking fund, for payment of interest, premium, or principal of the public debt, or of bonds known as the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, for expenses of the Smithsonian Institution (interest on trust fund); for refunding taxes illegally collected, and for payment of allowances of drawback under the internal-revenue laws; for payment to importers excess of deposits; for payment of debentures or drawbacks, bounties, and allowances; for payment of debentures and other charges, and for refunding proceeds of unclaimed merchandise under the customs-revenue laws, and for all other refunds; for the police and firemen's relief funds of the District of Columbia, created by the act of February 25, 1885; for the support of the Soldiers' Home; Indian trust funds deposited as provided by the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment," approved April 1, 1880, and under other acts, and for the Navy pension fund, and for all other trust funds, be, and the same are hereby, repealed to take effect from and after June 30, 1909: Provided, That payment of all liabilities legally incurred in the fiscal year 1909 under any of the appropriations affected by this act may be made therefrom until the close of the fiscal year 1911, at which date all balances of said appropriations then remaining unexpended shall be carried to the surplus fund.

SEC. 2. That all appropriations hereafter made shall remain available for two years for the payment of expenditures properly incurred within the time for which they are appropriated, at the expiration of which period all appropriations or balances of appropriations which shall have been upon the books of the Treasury for said period of two years shall be carried to the surplus fund, and the limitations herein placed upon expenditures shall apply to all appropriations now upon the books of the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations not repealed by this act, to appropriations for rivers and harbors, light-houses, fortifications, public buildings, the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for construction of ships of the Navy.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Departments of the Government to include in their annual estimates to Congress estimates of the amounts required for expenditures under appropriations affected by this act for the service of the fiscal year 1910 and annually thereafter.

SEC. 4. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana as to what portion of this bill the opinion of the Secretary is asked and the necessity for the opinion.

Mr. BRICK. The opinion is asked as to that which we intend to repeal, or that which the bill proposes to repeal; but, as a matter of fact, we want all the information that the Secretary of the Treasury can give us upon the whole bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You ask him an opinion as to whether it is legal to repeal, constitutional, or advisable?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BRICK. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Personally I do not care much about the request for the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Different Secretaries of the Treasury have at different times recommended that certain laws providing for permanent and indefinite appropriations for different objects be repealed, and it is believed that it would be of service to the committee in the consideration of the bill proposing to repeal some of these laws if the Secretary of the Treasury would set forth in a document giving the facts the reasons that had urged different Secretaries to recommend the repeal of these specific appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is to repeal the law for the regular annual permanent appropriations and this is a new law providing that all appropriations shall be made by Congress for certain specific purposes and shall remain in the Treasury subject to check?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is aware that there are a number of laws under which annually money is appropriated for certain services without being passed on by Congress. It is believed advisable that some of these laws should be repealed and that Congress should every year appropriate money for the particular service now covered in these permanent laws. It would be impossible in the ordinary transaction of the business of the Government to repeal all laws providing for the permanent appropriations, but it is believed that some of them can be repealed with benefit to the country and with some advantage to this House. The object of this amendment is to obtain from the Secretary of the Treasury, first, a statement of all of the laws providing for permanent, indefinite, or definite appropriations, the amounts that are expended under those acts, and his opinion as to whether they should be repealed, so that Congress may make specific appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The report on this resolution is unanimous, because it is believed by the committee that the information will be of great benefit to it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill. According to my interpretation of the bill it would repeal the permanent appropriation for the Naturalization Bureau. It would repeal the $3,000,000 permanently appropriated for the enforcement of the meat-inspection law, would it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that it would.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think clearly it would.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that the bill is not before the House. The bill was read to the House simply for information, to show the scope of the subject upon which the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury was asked.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask these questions because——

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say this: We are expending annually about $150,000,000 under the authority of these permanent appropriations. Concerning the service paid for out of these appropriations Congress knows nothing whatever, except in so far as we may gain information from the annual reports of the heads of the Departments having charge of the expenditure of these appropriations. It has been repeatedly urged that many of these appropriations be repealed. Take, for example, the appropriation for the collection of the customs. That appropriation was enacted many years ago, permanently appropriating $5,500,000 for the collection of the customs. To-day we are expending almost $10,000,000 in the collection of the customs. Now half of it is expended under a permanent appropriation and the other half is expended under an annual deficiency appropriation. As to that amount, whether expended under the annual deficiency appropriation or under the permanent appropriation, there is no information given to the House as to the details of it, as would be done if Congress appropriated from year to year. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury having the administration of these expenditures under permanent appropriations, it is simply for the purpose of ascertaining what his judgment is regarding the advisability of repealing all or any of them. The Committee on Appropriations desires that information in connection with the consideration of the bill before the committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman in the view that Congress ought to make the appropriations necessary to run the Government, as far as they can be made. I only asked the question for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the House the broad scope and important character of this bill. I will not make any objection to the consideration of the resolution. The committee and the House ought to have the information. I do not believe the resolution ought to call for the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury. If it were not such an important matter I should object to it upon that ground; but he is not compelled to give his opinion. The House ought to have the information, in order to guide its action, and therefore I make no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BRICK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table

THE CRIMINAL CODE.

On motion of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, the House again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the penal code bill (H. R. 11701), with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, respecting the pending amendment, I do not care to add anything to what was said by me yesterday. I understand the pending amendment embodies essentially the same principles as the amendment or new section proposed yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add a word only, in order that the committee may understand the situation. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois that there is a law that now punishes the acceptance of a bribe by a public official for the sake of influencing his action. Section 119 does cover the case where an official is bribed to take a given course or a false position in regard to any of his duties, and it would cover the case of an official who accepted a bribe and then made a false report in regard to crop statistics. The amendment adopted by the committee yesterday, covering the point raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], applies to what might be called the leaking of information prior to the time appointed for its being made public. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES] punishes the knowingly issuing of a false statement in regard to these statistics, without regard to whether that knowingly false statement is the result of a bribe or not. In other words, it can and will cover a class of cases which are not now covered. For instance, if a man in charge of the gathering and publishing of these statistics knowingly makes a false statement for purposes of his own, even where there has been no bribery of him, there would now be no law to punish him. Under this act there would be.

I simply desired to bring the matter to the attention of the committee, that they might understand just what was involved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I fully sympathize with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and my friend from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES] in reference to this matter. The law now provides that if for any ulterior motive, practically, if for anything coming to the party, one of the persons in the Agricultural Department, for instance, miscalculates, it is a penal offense. This proposition is to punish them where there is no reason for miscalculation.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will bear with me, I do not think that that statement quite meets the situation.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will pardon me, I will elucidate it further. It is true that somebody in the Agricultural Department might have a friend that he desired to benefit and might issue erroneous figures without any possible benefit coming to the person who issued them, in which case there is no punishment provided. But what I hope will be safeguarded is this: Everybody who uses figures makes mistakes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But this says "knowingly."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee presented an amendment yesterday, and the gentleman from Kentucky presents a substitute to-day which no one of us has had a chance to see. The other gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] just now, referring to the amendment, said "knowingly issues the figures." Of course the figures are "knowingly issued;" the question is whether they are issued knowing them to be false.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, the section does say that he shall knowingly issue false certificates, and "knowingly" applies to the falsity and his knowledge of the falsity, and properly hedges the matter around.

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be of some benefit to some gentleman to insert it in the law, but it amounts to nothing, because if you have to prove that a man or woman in the Department knew that they were miscalculating the figures, that is beyond proof.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose her boss made her issue them; suppose some man down there said: "You have got to do it, or I will discharge you."

Mr. MANN. She would not be the one who issued the figures; the penalty would be imposed upon her boss, and you could not prove that he knew it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In that case I would put him in the penitentiary, and——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman would not convict a woman no matter what she did; he knows it. [Laughter.] All they would have to do in a case of this kind would be to have the woman make up the figures, and if the gentleman from Tennessee was on the bench or in the jury box, there would be no conviction. [Laughter.] The only objection I make to this sort of proposition is that without being duly considered, without passing the scrutiny of a committee that has a chance to see it in type, we can not appreciate the force of it. It may be that the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee is able to tell what a thing is by hearing it read, but, as far as I am concerned, I can never tell what the scope of an amendment is until I see it in black and white, in print.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There it is, the gentleman has it in his hand. Will not the gentleman read it in the hearing of the House?

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad to read it, because it is well written, if it would be of any benefit to the gentleman from Tennessee. Otherwise I was going to yield the floor.

Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States and whose duty requires the compilation or report of statistics for information relative to the products of the soil, shall knowingly compile for issuance or issue any false statistics or information as a report of the United States shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

It is precisely as I stated. Under this there is a penalty against the Secretary of Agriculture who knowingly issues figures which prove to be false. It does not require that he shall know them to be false. Of course I do not apprehend that a jury would convict him or that a judge would sentence him, but there are close cases at times where the Government seeks to prosecute officials. The present Administration, in my judgment, at different times, has sought not to prosecute but to persecute certain people. I do not wish to put in the control of any government the power under a technical plea to persecute an official, unless it be necessary, and I don't think it is ever necessary.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be another case of the lawyers not agreeing. They are again at variance as to the correct interpretation of the law, and it seems to me that it would be far better if these laws, as well as all other laws of the United States and of the States, were written in such plain and concise form that even the common people would understand them. It would then not be necessary to go to a lawyer to get an interpretation of the law, and find that he did not agree with some other lawyer. [Laughter.] Why, the laws are made for the people, to tell them what to do and what not to do, and to inform them what punishment awaits them if they do not conform to the law. For this reason the laws ought to be so framed as to be easily understood by everyone. We could have profited by the example set by Germany in framing their civil code, a book so plainly written that everyone who can read a third reader can understand what the law means. A number of judges worked on that code for years, and when finally published, the laws were plain and understood by all. Those laws complete can be bought for 19 cents a volume, and when people are at outs about anything, the two parties concerned come together, read the laws, understand the laws, and act accordingly. I hope the time will come when we will not have as many synonyms and such long, complicated sentences in our laws, and that they will be plain, so plain that the people for whom they are intended will understand them. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he can give us a reference to a place where we can buy that book.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The passage of this amendment will protect the producer in other ways. Suppose a man in a Department compiles these figures without having a bribe offered to him, and knowingly issues false statements and then goes and speculates in the market himself. It will reach that evil also?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I fully agree with the gentleman, that the matter ought to be covered in some way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 112 for the purpose of offering a few formal amendments to that section. The amendments I wish to offer are as follows:

On line 1, page 55, after the word "elected," to add the words "or appointed."

On lines 2 and 3, page 55, to strike out the words "from any Territory of the United States."

On line 3 to add the words "or appointment" after the word "elections."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the second amendment the gentleman has just referred to has been agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. I ask unanimous consent to return to the section for the purpose of offering the other amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to section 112 for the purpose of offering the amendments which he has read. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask a question. I do not desire to object if this is necessary, but we have heretofore been told that this bill was so perfect a piece of legislation that it could not be improved upon; that it was as perfect a piece as could be conceived by Commission or by any committee. I am, therefore, rather surprised that anything has escaped the attention of the committee—that there is any imperfection in it. I did not hear what the gentleman said, but I would like to know why it is necessary to return to any particular paragraph to perfect it?

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to explain.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Before the gentleman proceeds I would call his attention to the fact that there have been one or two requests for unanimous consent to return to a paragraph made by gentlemen who were unfortunate enough to occupy a seat on this side of the Chamber, and those requests have been uniformly refused, even though the amendment suggested was an amendment that many of us thought was a proper one. I do not desire to retaliate, and shall not do so if the gentleman will inform me what the necessity of returning to this section is.

Mr. DENBY. I am very glad to explain to the gentleman from Georgia and to the committee very briefly what the amendment covers which I seek to offer. In those sections which deal with Congressional offenses the words "elected a Member or Delegate to Congress" were used in the bill as submitted to the House. In an amendment, emanating from the gentleman's side of the House, but accepted very gladly, the words "or appointed" were added, in order to cover the case of Members of Congress not only elected, but also those who had been appointed. That amendment was put in most of the sections, but omitted by accident in the rush of the debate from several other sections. The purpose is to make the language uniform in all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I readily perceive the propriety and the necessity of the gentleman's amendment. The only thing about it is that we should all realize that this bill is not such a piece of perfection as it was originally thought to be.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, pending the right to object, will the gentleman yield for a question? The gentleman asks to insert, after the word "elected," the words "or appointed."

Mr. DENBY. Line 1, page 55; yes.

Mr. PERKINS. A Member of Congress can not be appointed.

Mr. DENBY. But a Senator is a Member of Congress, and a Senator may be appointed by a governor.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 1, after the word "elected," insert the words "or appointed," and in line 3, after the word "election," insert the words "or appointment."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 113 for the purpose of offering the following amendment:

Page 56, line 5, after the word "election," add the words "or appointment."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to section 113 for the purpose of offering the amendment which he has stated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, line 5, after the word "election," insert the words "or appointment."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 114 for the purpose of offering the following amendment:

Page 56, after the word "elected," add the words "or appointed."

Also,

Page 56, line 18, after the word "election," add the words "or appointment."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to section 114 for the purpose of offering the amendment which he has stated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, line 16, after the word "elected," insert the words "or appointed;" and, in line 18, after the word "election," insert the words "or appointment."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 117 for the purpose of offering the following amendment: Page 59, line 6, after the word "election," add the words "or appointment."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 6, after the word "election," insert the words "or appointment."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, right here I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there has been any amendment to section 7 as it was reported by the committee.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Section 7 of the bill?

Mr. WANGER. Yes. The section as reported forbids recruiting of any soldiers or sailors within the United States or within any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof to engage in armed hostilities against the same, and then forbids the opening within the United States of a recruiting station for the enlistment of such soldiers or sailors, but it does not forbid the opening of a recruiting office in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and apparently it certainly should.

Mr. DENBY. The section as reported to the House forbids the opening of a recruiting station in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, as well as in the United States.

Mr. WANGER. Then the bill itself is different from the report. No; I think my friend is mistaken in his supposition. It forbids the recruiting in the United States or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, but it only forbids the opening within the United States of a recruiting station.

Mr. DENBY. I see the gentleman's point, although it would seem to me the language of the bill fully covers the point.

Mr. WANGER. I think not.

Mr. DENBY. Because a recruiting station might be opened subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, but the bill specifically forbids recruiting, and a recruiting station would be useless if they could not recruit soldiers there.

Mr. WANGER. But, as we forbid the opening of any such station within the United States, should we not also forbid the opening of it in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States?

Mr. DENBY. Well, unless the gentleman feels the matter is so important, it seems to me it is covered sufficiently by the existing language. As I say, there might be a recruiting station, but if you could not recruit at it, it would be of no value.

Mr. WANGER. You might not be able to prove as to recruiting, but it might be easy to prove the opening of a recruiting station. I will ask unanimous consent to return to that section.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] that the——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] asks unanimous consent to return to section 7.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the regular order. And I want to say to my colleague——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists on the regular order, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 125. [Whoever having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed, is true, shall willfully and contrary to such oath state or subscribe any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose later on in the consideration of this bill——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make some motion?

Mr. GARRETT. I move to strike out the last word. It is my purpose in the consideration of this bill to offer an amendment. That amendment will be offered in good faith. It touches upon what seems to me to be an important matter, worthy of the consideration of this committee. And I desire to send now to the desk and have read in my time the amendment which I shall propose in order that it may go into the RECORD and be scrutinized by the members of this committee before the section is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, after section 214, insert the following as a new section, to be numbered section 214a.

"No letter, postal card, circular, book, newspaper, pamphlet, writing, or other publication containing any advertisement, notice, account, or record of any contract which is made for future delivery of any product or products of the soil, minerals, meats, stocks, bonds, or anything whatsoever, tangible or intangible, without agreeing and intending that the article or stock or asset which is the subject of such contract shall be actually delivered or received in kind, or relating to any contract wherein any party thereto in whose behalf such contract is made acquires the right or privileges to demand in the future the acceptance or delivery of such article or asset without being thereby obligated to deliver or accept same; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, money order, or other instrument of payment or obligation for any such contract or transaction hereinabove defined; and no notice, letter, writing, or publication of any kind or character referring or relating to what is commonly called "dealing in futures," "stock gambling," or other names or terms intended to be understood as relating to such contracts as are herein described, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

"Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than two years; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed."

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment.

Mr. GARRETT. Gentlemen, in scrutinizing this amendment, will find that it is modeled after the lottery section. I am not clear but that the amendment should come immediately after section 215 rather than 214. That is a mere matter of detail which can be taken up when the time arrives. I have placed it in the RECORD in order that any interested may scrutinize it by the time we reach the section.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. As I understand, there is no motion.

Mr. GARRETT. No, not now.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] in reference to this section which has just been read. I understand that in this section you propose to incorporate words defining perjury. According to the note at the head of this bill, as being embraced in brackets, this section is formed by combining different sections or provisions of existing law. Is that correct?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The brackets indicate more than that.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have just read what the gentleman has reported to the House they indicate, as shown on the very first page of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will observe——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I did not use my own language. I used the language of the committee when I called the gentleman's attention to that.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The paragraph at the head of the bill explaining the use of the bracket says it is applied to sections "from which any material thing has been omitted or which is made by combining together two sections," and the gentleman will find upon examining the section under consideration that something material has been omitted out of existing law in section 125, and therefore it is in brackets, and the report explaining section 125 calls attention to it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have read the report. The gentleman, then, admits there has been something omitted from the existing law in this section. My recollection is quite clear that the gentleman does not provide for false swearing anywhere. It makes a false affidavit or false oath, whether in judicial proceeding or not, a perjury.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. This section is existing law with the single exception it strikes out the disqualification to testify upon conviction. This does not alter existing law in any respect except that.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Can the gentleman give some good reason—and I have no doubt he has one—why a person convicted of perjury should be permitted to testify as a witness in the courts?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I would like to hear it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, that, as the gentleman, who is an experienced lawyer, knows, is one of the remnants of the old common law of disqualification—the application of the doctrine of the crimen falsi. The gentleman also knows that that doctrine is almost entirely exploded and has little or no application in modern jurisprudence and that nearly all modern States have striken it out of their criminal code. It has been done in England, and has been done in most of the States of the Union. This is a part of the great advance that has been made in the administration of justice in recent years, the advance that now permits a defendant to testify in his own behalf, his interest in the subject-matter affecting only his credibility as a witness. And, in line with that advance, England and most States have permitted a man convicted of perjury to testify, leaving the fact of his conviction to go to his credibility as a witness. It is in the line of modern penology. I could give the gentleman a list of the States if he desires it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not wish that. But all the States do not follow it. Most of the States have removed the disqualification of interest or the fact if a person is convicted of felony or of a misdemeanor, but I do not understand that all of the States removed the disqualification, where a man is convicted of perjury, from testifying. I know that all the States have set aside a verdict based upon testimony given by a witness who is convicted of perjury. The point I rose to inquire about is that it makes everything here perjury, whether this false swearing and false proceeding is in the nature of a judicial proceeding or not. The distinction between perjury and false swearing is that perjury is committed in a judicial proceeding, and false swearing is that wherein the false swearing is not in a judicial proceeding.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, I will say to the gentleman that this is the law of the United States and has been for a great many years. The law of to-day says exactly as does the section proposed, that whoever, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person in any case in which the law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered in a matter that is material to the subject, and having taken such oath, testifies falsely in that respect, shall be guilty of perjury.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 126. Whoever shall procure another to commit any perjury is guilty of subornation of perjury, and punishable as in the preceding section prescribed.

Mr. HARDY. I move to strike out the last word. I rise, Mr. Chairman, just in passing, to call attention to the fact, as evidenced by the explanation made by the gentleman in charge of this bill a moment ago, that this is not a bill simply to codify, but that this committee have in numerous instances, that being one, assumed the right or the duty to provide very important amendments to the law as it now exists. Now, the amendment we have made to enable the convicted perjurer to still testify is one I am in favor of. It is in line, as stated by the Chairman, with modern judicial enactment; but it is a very material one when it gives the right thereunder given to a convicted felon. I wished to simply make this note for the purpose of saying that when we come to equally important amendments before this House in the progress of this bill it ought not to be a bar to their discussion or prevent their enactment to simply assert that it is new law.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 127. Whoever shall feloniously steal, take away, alter, falsify, or otherwise avoid any record, writ, process, or other proceeding, in any court of the United States, by means whereof any judgment is reversed, made void, or does not take effect; or whoever shall acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, in any such court, any recognizance, bail, or judgment, in the name of any other person not privy or consenting to the same, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than seven years, or both; but this provision shall not extend to the acknowledgment of any judgment by an attorney, duly admitted, for any person against whom such judgment is had or given.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. It says "whoever shall feloniously steal, take away, alter, falsify, or otherwise avoid any record, writ, process, or other proceeding, in any court of the United States, by means whereof any judgment is reversed," etc. Now, is it necessary to have such bad result follow in order to make a crime of the stealing and taking away or falsifying the record? Is there any punishment for that, in case the bad result provided for does not follow? Do you see the point?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes; I see the point.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to have that explained. Is there any provision for punishment in this act in a case where a bad result does not follow from it?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will realize the difficulty of answering all these questions upon the spur of the moment. Now, I will answer it in a moment, and I think perhaps conclusively. We now have this law existing in the statute book. When a gentleman asks me on the floor when I am considering the whole bill, it is necessarily difficult to answer questions covering every item of the bill; but I will say to the gentleman that the next section practically covers the thought in his mind, section 128, which we have broadened very materially by the addition of other words, which I think covers that.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 131. [Whoever, directly or indirectly, shall give or offer, or cause to be given or offered, any money, property, or value of any kind, or any promise or agreement therefor, or any other bribe, to any judge, judicial officer, or other person authorized by any law of the United States to hear or determine any question, matter, cause, proceeding, or controversy, with intent to influence his action, vote, opinion, or decision thereon, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both; and shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 131 by inserting on page 66, line 4, between the words "thereon" and "shall," the following: "or because of any such action, vote, opinion, or decision."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the section as it now stands provides for punishing anybody who shall give or offer to a judge any money or property for the purpose of influencing his vote, opinion, action, or decision. If the amendment were incorporated, it would also provide that anybody who gives to him any of these things because or on account of his action, vote, opinion, or decision shall be punished in that way. I would ask the Clerk to read that part of the section as it would read if the amendment were incorporated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whoever, directly or indirectly, shall give or offer, or cause to be given or offered, any money, property, or value of any kind, or any promise or agreement therefor, or any other bribe, to any judge, judicial officer, or other person authorized by any law of the United States to hear or determine any question, matter, cause, proceeding, or controversy, with intent to influence his action, vote, opinion, or decision thereon, or because of any such action, vote, opinion, or decision, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both; and shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that I think this makes it clearer and stronger, and I accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 132. Whoever, being a judge of a court of the United States, shall in anywise accept or receive any sum of money, or other bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, obligation, gift, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, with the intent to be influenced thereby in any opinion, judgment, or decree in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause depending before him, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both; and shall be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, after the word "judge," in the first line of the paragraph, the words "of a court," so that it will read:

Whoever, being a judge of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, page 66, strike out the words "of a court."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, as the section now reads, it might limit the section to a judge of a court in the United States, leaving the words "of a court" to qualify the words "of the United States;" whereas the section should apply also to the United States judge of a Territorial court. I think the words "of a court" narrow the section unnecessarily.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 132 by inserting, on page 66, line 15, between the words "him" and "shall," the words "or because of any opinion, ruling, decision, judgment, or decree."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is of precisely the same character as the one offered to the preceding section, which has been agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I should like to have the Clerk read the section as it would read when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will report the section as it would read if amended.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose, and, Mr. DAVIDSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

CODIFICATION OF THE PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 132. Whoever, being a judge of the United States, shall in any wise accept or receive any sum of money, or other bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, obligation, gift, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, with the intent to be influenced thereby in any opinion, judgment, or decree in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause depending before him, or because of any opinion, ruling, decision, judgment, or decree, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both; and shall be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that amendment covers the same thing that was covered in section 131, and is in the line of the section itself, and the committee, accordingly, make no opposition to it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It seems to me the gentleman ought to add the words "rendered by him" to make it complete.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think it refers to just exactly what the other refers to, and covers it completely, in my opinion.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not think it is clear.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I should like to have the Clerk read that once more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that, if the gentleman will permit, the word "such" be put in there, so that it will read "because of any such opinion," etc.; that will make the sentence perfectly plain.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Very well, put in the word "such."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why not put in the words "rendered by him?"

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think those words tend to narrow it, because that phrase is not used in the other part of the section. I think putting in the word "such" is entirely unobjectionable, and I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky offer that as an amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I offer that as an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment so as to read "or because of any such opinion, ruling, decision, judgment, or decree."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 133. Whoever, being a juror, referee, arbitrator, appraiser, assessor, auditor, master, receiver, United States commissioner, or other person authorized by any law of the United States to hear or determine any question, matter, cause, controversy, or proceeding, shall ask, receive, or agree to receive, any money, property, or value of any kind, or any promise or agreement therefor, upon any agreement or understanding that his vote, opinion, action, judgment, or decision shall be influenced thereby, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 133 by inserting on page 67, line 2, between the words "thereby" and "shall," the following: "or because of any such vote, opinion, action, judgment, or decision."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 134 Whoever being, or about to be, a witness upon a trial, hearing, or other proceeding, before any court or any officer authorized by the laws of the United States to hear evidence or take testimony, shall receive or agree or offer to receive a bribe, upon any agreement or understanding that his testimony shall be influenced thereby, or that he will absent himself from the trial, hearing, or other proceeding, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 134, on page 69, by inserting between the word "proceeding," lines 11 and 12, and the word "shall," in line 12, the words "or because of any such testimony of such absence."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the section read as it will read with that proposed amendment incorporated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the section will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 134. Whoever being a prisoner, confined in a prison, penitentiary, ing, or other proceeding, before any court or any officer authorized by the laws of the United States to hear evidence or take testimony, shall receive or agree or offer to receive a bribe, upon any agreement or understanding that his testimony shall be influenced thereby, or that he will absent himself from the trial, hearing, or other proceeding, or because of any such testimony of such absence, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 138. Whoever being a prisoner, confined in a prison, penitentiary, jail, or other place of detention, or being in lawful custody of an officer or other person by authority of the United States, shall escape or attempt to escape from such prison, penitentiary, jail, or other place of detention, or custody, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than seven years, or both.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that this is new matter in this bill, and while I have no serious objection to punishing a prisoner who may attempt to escape, or escapes after conviction, because most States have that law—although I think it a very unkind and harsh law—I do not desire to assent to a proposition that would punish a man for escaping before he is convicted. In other words, this section is so broad that a man may be convicted for getting away from the custody of an officer who has him in charge, when upon trial he would not be convicted of any offense. In many cases, for escaping from an officer who had arrested him for misdemeanor, or a mere trifling offense, it would render a man subject to be indicted, tried, and convicted for a very serious felony. I do not desire to assent to that proposition. I do not desire to assent to the proposition that if a man before he is convicted when arrested charged with some misdemeanor, escapes or attempts to escape from the custody of an officer, he is guilty of a felony, no matter what may be the offense of which he is charged. Therefore, I offer this amendment so as to confine it to an escape after conviction. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69 add after the word "prisoner," in line 1, the following: "under conviction or sentence." Also by inserting in line 3, page 69, before the word "in," the words "convicted and."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. So that the section will read that "whoever, being a prisoner, after conviction or sentence shall escape," etc., and to the other part of the section, "being in lawful custody," I propose to add, before the words "in lawful custody," "after being convicted and in lawful custody," etc.

Now, we are here making it an offense for a man to escape or attempt to escape—not to resist an officer or anything of that sort, because there are other provisions in this code which provide for resisting an officer and for rescuing or attempting to rescue a prisoner.

Very often a man escapes, or makes a technical escape, from the custody of an officer when the prisoner is not guilty of anything. I have known cases where men have been arrested, knew they were not guilty, have escaped from the officer when they had the opportunity for the purpose of securing bail, and then in a few days delivering themselves up to the officer, giving bail, in order that they might not go to jail.

Members must remember that in the territory in which some of us live persons may be arrested hundreds of miles from that portion of the district where the commissioner lives or the courts are held, and to take them there without providing for bail means that they must remain in jail. Men are often arrested that are not convicted in the United States court. It often occurs in other courts, and therefore I do not desire, when the provision was never in the law before, to make the offense a crime for a man who escapes, or attempts to escape, from the custody of an officer, a man who has not been lawfully convicted or guilty of anything and is charged with being guilty of a misdemeanor—I am not in favor of making that a felony under the law. It does not say if he resists an officer. This is simply to escape——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Let me finish the sentence. If he simply gets away from the officer who has gone asleep on board a train, say, if he walks out or if he escapes from an officer without the use of any force, he is guilty of a felony, and I do not like this new addition to the criminal code which makes a man who is not guilty, who can never be found guilty, guilty of a felony because he escapes either through the negligence of an officer or by any other means, not using any force to escape.

Mr. DRISCOLL. As I understand the gentleman, he says that if a man is convicted of a crime and escapes after such conviction he may be properly punished under this proposed section.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I did not say I was in favor of it. I said I was more in favor of that than I was of the section as it stands. I do not think it accords with humanity to enact the section into law.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If he is not convicted and escapes pending a trial or before the trial, you would not have him subject to this section.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not hear the gentleman.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If he is not convicted, if it is before trial, and of course before trial he would not be convicted, therefore you think this section should not apply.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not think we should punish a man who simply escapes before trial.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But suppose he is actually guilty.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No man is actually guilty who is not found guilty.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But suppose he is guilty and suppose he gets away so that he never can be convicted, would you not consider the escaping before trial some offense? Assume that he is guilty and that he gets away.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I said it ought not to be any offense to get away before he is convicted; to make it any greater crime for an innocent man to get away than for a guilty man to be convicted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If he is innocent, why should he not wait and stand trial?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Oh, a great many men do stand trial who are not guilty, and a great many men get away from the jail in order to get bail and not be confined who are not guilty.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the gentleman from Georgia says that this statute would convict a man of a felony.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I understand from the reading of this section that he may be fined not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Or imprisoned not more than seven years.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. That permits the court to fine him or imprison him either.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. If he is fined $1 he would not be convicted of a felony, would he?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. You indict him for a penitentiary offense, and we do not define felonies, as I understand it, by the United States statute. Some of the States do, and in some States a felony is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I desire to ask the further question: Does the gentleman not think that anyone who is a prisoner in charge of an officer and charged with a crime—that it is his duty as a good citizen to observe and respect the constituted authorities, even though he may not be guilty of a crime?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly I do. There is no question about my believing that.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Under this section of law the discretion is left at last to the court to impose a fine as low as $1.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is all true, Mr. Chairman, but I do not believe that after living under this law for one hundred years or more—and this is all new now, as I understand it; it is something which has emanated from the brain of the Commission and has been approved by the gentlemen who made up this report—I do not believe that we ought to make it a crime for a man who has not been adjudged guilty to escape. I do believe it ought to be made a crime if you resist an arrest or if you get away by assault upon an officer, and that is provided, but for a man to escape—and not only that, but you make it a crime if he attempts to escape, and you make an attempt to escape as great a misdemeanor as the escaping itself. Officers who could not secure evidence sufficient to convict a man of a charge for which they have arrested him could very easily put up a charge by saying the man tried to escape, by saying that they can not convict him of the offense for which they arrested him, but that they will charge him with an attempt to escape, and that they will convict him of that, because nobody is present at the arrest but themselves and the prisoner.

I have offered these amendments because I do not think that an untried, unconvicted, not-found-guilty man should be put upon the same footing in the matter here dealt with in this section as a man who has been adjudged by the law to be a convicted felon or a man guilty of a misdemeanor, for everybody is presumed under the humanity of our law to be innocent until they are shown to be guilty. Here we make it a serious offense, in many cases a much more serious offense than the man may be charged with when arrested, to escape or to attempt to escape. Against the introduction of such inhumanity into the law I, for one, protest.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 26, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 139. Whenever any marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person has in his custody any prisoner by virtue of process issued under the laws of the United States by any court, judge, or commissioner, and such marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person voluntarily suffers such prisoner to escape, he shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 139, on page 69, by inserting in line 13, between the words "voluntarily" and "suffers," the following: "or negligently."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, if that amendment were adopted an officer would be liable to the penalties imposed by the section for a negligent escape as well as a voluntary one. It seems to me it would improve the section to incorporate that word.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND) there were—ayes 26, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 15, page 59, the word "two" and insert the word "seven," so it will read "seven years" in place of two.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15, after the word "than" strike out the word "two" and insert "seven," so as to read "not more than seven years."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, we have just refused in any way to change this new and modern proposition, put into this bill by the Commission and the committee on revision, by which we make it a crime punishable by seven years' imprisonment, at least it may be that long, for a man to escape from an officer, and we have the remarkable proposition in the next section where you only make it a crime punishable by two years for an officer to voluntarily let him get away. Now, it occurs to me that the punishment ought to be severer upon the officer whose duty it is to keep the prisoner in custody than it is for the prisoner to escape. We have here a law which makes it seven years for a man to escape and makes it a crime punishable for two years for an officer to permit him to get away or who accepts a bribe or who walks away leaving him and telling him to go; it occurs to me that the greater punishment ought to be visited upon the officer and not upon the man.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the gentleman's amendment? I was unavoidably absent at the time he offered it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I tried to amend the other section, and I now propose in this section 139 to make the officer equally guilty and punish him by seven years' imprisonment well as the man who gets away. You make it in the bill but two years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Your motion is to strike out "two" and substitute "seven?"

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think there is any objection to that. I think it might be a grave offense and ought to be properly punished.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think so, too. If you punish the man for getting away, you ought to punish the man for letting him get away. That is all I have to say. I do not desire to disturb the consistency and beauty of this bill, but I want to see if I can make it a little more consistent and symmetrical.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the distinction between the punishment in those two cases is based upon the fact that the prisoner in attempting to escape frequently uses violence, and it is often the case that the life of the jailer or the person who has him in custody is in jeopardy. In the other case it is simply a man who permits him to escape, being the man who has him in custody, and he might be liable even without the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, for doing it negligently, and it seems to me, therefore, the punishment in one case ought to be greater than in the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 37, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 141. [Whoever shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer of the United States, or other person duly authorized, in serving, or attempting to serve or execute, any mesne process or warrant, or any rule or order, or any other legal or judicial writ or process of any court of the United States, or United States commissioner, or shall assault, beat, or wound any officer or other person duly authorized in serving or executing any such writ, rule, order, process, warrant, or other legal or judicial writ or process, shall be fined not more than $300 and imprisoned not more than one year.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 141 by striking out in line 25, page 69, and line 1, page 70, the following words: "or other person duly authorized;" also by striking out the words "or United States Commissioner," line 4, page 70; also by striking out the words "or other legal or judicial writ or process," in line 7, page 70, and inserting between the word "shall," line 4, and the word "assault," line 5, page 70, the words "knowingly and willfully."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, but slight changes have been made in this section so far as the number of words introduced into it in addition to those that were in before are concerned, but the effect is a very considerable one. I do not know how thoroughly the committee may have taken that into account. They have entirely changed the form of expression. I understand that to be in conformity with their general principle of endeavoring to have uniform expression in the wording of the statutes. In this particular instance what was expressed in the old statute in the old language would be better expressed in the new statute in the old language, but that aside, they have incorporated some new elements which it appears to me ought not to be included. For instance, in the first part of the section they have incorporated the words "or other person duly authorized," words which the amendment proposes to strike out. Now, I do not think that those words ought to be put into this section. As they have worded it the section provides that "whoever shall knowingly or willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer of the United States or other person duly authorized." This is a highly penal statute, and it seems to me that unless there be absolute necessity for it the outside especially authorized person, who may be vaguely and improperly authorized, ought not to be included. I believe, too, that the addition of "or United States commissioner," or, in other words, making the process of the United States commissioner have the same effect and amount to the same thing, so far as this section is concerned, as that which issues from the court, is not right. Then as to the final addition which it is moved to strike out "or other legal or judicial writ or process," I confess I do not know, and I am not sure that the committee precisely knows, just what that is meant to be or to express. The words which we have already in the statute in the old law are "writ, rule, order, process, or warrant." That, according to the notions of these gentlemen, is not sufficiently comprehensive, but we take in "other legal or judicial writ or process." That may be meant to cover something extraordinary, unusual, adapted to some special case, to reach some emergency, as it may be supposed, or it may be general language employed in a general way. If the purpose be to reach some case not covered by the old language of the statute, I think that purpose ought to be disclosed—we ought to know what it is. It seems to me it could not very well be a good purpose. If the words are put in without having any special meaning and without any special purpose, then it would appear to me that the section is strong enough with those words omitted and with the old words in the section employed as they are.

The remaining part of the amendment goes to the insertion of the words "knowingly and willfully," those which are employed at the outset in the section, before the word "shall," in its final denunciation of the penalty. Now, in the change of the phraseology in the rewriting of the section it is very clear, of course, that the words "knowingly and willfully" describe that part of the offense which consists in obstructing, resisting, or opposing an officer of the United States; but when we come down to the next clause, where the provision is "shall assault, beat, or wound any officer or other person," the word "shall" being repeated and different verbs being employed, it seems to me, without the repetition those words are not to be supplied by construction, and so are not in the section. As the section was worded of old, the main qualifiers were carried clear through, because the construction was such as to carry them clear through.

But here are thoroughly distinct clauses, and if you want to provide that to assault, beat, or wound any officer or other person in order to constitute an offense shall be done knowingly and willfully, I think it becomes necessary to use those words, to repeat them. I think that the amendment is a decided improvement to the section. It would remove something which must be unnecessary as surplusage, or possibly may be dangerous; and it would leave beyond implication and beyond construction the question whether this specification of knowingly and willfully is to apply throughout or apply only to the early portion.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the committee that the enlargement of this law was reported by the Revision Commission on the recommendation of the Department of Justice. I think it explains itself. It seems to be perfectly clear. The words that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri seeks to exclude, "or other persons duly authorized," includes in this law persons who might be appointed deputies by the court to serve processes. It was the feeling of the Commission, and it was the recommendation of the Department of Justice, I will say, based on the experience of the Department and on the experience of that class of men engaged in the execution of mandates of courts of justice, that they who were not officers, but men specially appointed to serve the orders of the court, ought to be protected. Respecting the amendment of the gentleman to strike out the words "United States commissioner," it would seem to me not to need any explanation, that without the addition of the words "United States commissioner" added to the words "judges of the court," persons could willfully obstruct, resist, and oppose the service of a warrant issued against a criminal, as it is well known that warrants for the arrest of persons charged with a violation of Federal statutes are generally issued by United States commissioners, and as the law exists to-day without this enlargement the resisting of an officer of that kind, obstructing or opposing the execution of a warrant issued by a United States commissioner can not be punished. The additional amendment offered by the gentleman seeking to strike from the section the words "or other legal or judicial writ or process" in the enumeration of the orders and process of the courts which its officers are to be protected in serving seems to me ought not to prevail. Your committee believe with the Commission of Revision that these words were necessary in order to punish as a crime the attempt to obstruct or resist service of any process issued by a court or by the legally constituted authorities of the United States, and that there might be other processes or writs which the enumeration contained in the statute did not cover. For that reason they have inserted the amendment, and we believe it is a necessary enlargement of existing law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Why is it that they think that if this process or writ shall be issued by the court commissioner these particular words should be used?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would say to the gentleman that at the present moment I can not state what particular process might be omitted, but that the Department of Justice and the Commission and the committee at the time it considered the bill felt that these words, "writ, rule, order, process, warrant," might not cover all of the legal writs that might be issued in a court of the United States, and that ought to be served by a proper constituted officer, and they also felt that the court ought to protect the officers serving any and all processes of the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman about these qualifying words; whether in his understanding of this section as it now stands, the words "knowingly and willfully" are carried down, or are inserted by indication, after the word "shall" and before "assault."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will state to the gentleman that upon that question there might be some doubt. The addition of the words "willfully and knowingly" might be in the direction of clearness, and I certainly should not oppose that amendment. That is what the committee intended to make clear, and if it seem that those words would make it somewhat clearer they ought to be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

[Mr. KIMBALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Division!

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded. The Chair will count all gentlemen standing.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This is a reunited Democracy standing, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter].

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 50, noes 73.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I should like to have tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. DE ARMOND.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I now move to insert the words "knowingly and willfully" between the words "shall," in line 4, and "assault," in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, page 70, before the word "assault," insert the words "knowingly and willfully."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire recognition on his amendment?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the words "knowingly and willfully" are unnecessary. A man could hardly commit an assault or beat or wound without doing it willfully and knowingly. I thought the gentleman wanted to put those words so that it would provide that he must know that it was an officer of the United States.

Mr. DE ARMOND. In the old section the words applied to that.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Here is an attempt to assault and beat, and it seems to me that it would be absolutely unnecessary to say that a man who committed an assault must commit it knowingly. He couldn't do it in any other way.

Mr. DE ARMOND. They were in the old law, and they were only in once, and the construction of the sentence——

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would not think that that could be transposed to give that construction.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Undoubtedly those words are carried down in the old law, and the assaulting, beating, and wounding must be done knowingly and willfully. The gentleman will notice that the words are coupled, and not in the alternative.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The very term "assault" does not include the idea that it is done knowingly. It could not be done without, and I shall oppose the insertion of the terms "willfully and knowingly" at that point. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it would be incongruous to say that a man should knowingly assault another when the very terms of assault implies that it is done knowingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 70, line 7, strike out the words "or other legal or judicial writ or process."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was not that included in the first proposed amendment? Did not the Chair submit to the House the three amendments offered by the gentleman from Missouri, including the motion to strike that out? I raise that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not read the amendment and can not say from memory.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That was a part of the first amendment, Mr. Chairman; and that being a part of the amendment, and this being an amendment to distinct statutes, they are two propositions.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would say respecting that that they must necessarily be considered upon a distinct and separate basis. They refer to different parts of the section, but it would seem to me that this was considered as a separate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the privilege of any member of the committee to have demanded a division of the amendment and had a vote on each proposition. That was not done, and this proposition differs materially from the proposition which the House voted on. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND) there were—ayes 47, noes 63.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. DE ARMOND.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 52, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 2, page 70, correct the spelling of the word "warrant."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], I wish to offer an amendment which I think will cover the idea he had in suggesting an agreement about the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], and that is, in line 6, after the word "authorize," to amend by inserting the words "knowing him to be such officer or other person so duly authorized."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, that is the amendment that I supposed was originally offered by the gentleman from Missouri, and which makes clear what it was the intention of the committee to make clear. It may be possible, as I stated at that time, that the insertion of that language does make it clearer, that he shall know that the person assaulted is an officer of the United States, and as I indicated a willingness on the part of the committee to accept the amendment when made by the gentleman from Missouri, I still indicate that willingness now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 6, after the word "authorize," the words "knowing him to be such officer or person so duly authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 142. [Whoever shall rescue or attempt to rescue, from the custody of any officer or person lawfully assisting him, any person arrested upon a warrant or other process issued under the provisions of any law of the United States, or shall, directly or indirectly, aid, abet, or assist any person so arrested to escape from the custody of such officer or other person, or shall harbor or conceal any person for whose arrest a warrant or process has been so issued, so as to prevent his discovery and arrest, after notice or knowledge of the fact that a warrant or process has been issued for the apprehension of such person, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 12 and 17, section 142, correct the spelling of the word "warrant."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 144. Whoever, by force, shall set at liberty or rescue any person who, before conviction, stands committed for any capital crime; or whoever, by force, shall set at liberty or rescue any person committed for or convicted of any offense other than capital, shall be fined not more than $500, and imprisoned not more than one year.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I merely want to compare this section with section 138, which I desire to correct by amendment I offered a short time ago, and to show that the committee have imposed a severer penalty upon a slight offense than on a grave one. This section declares that—

Whoever by force shall set at liberty or rescue any person who before conviction stands committed for any capital crime or whoever by force shall set at liberty or rescue any person committed for or convicted of any offense other than capital, shall be fined not more than $500 and imprisoned not more than one year.

I apprehend that punishment is sufficient. But if the members of the committee will recur to section 138, they will see that if a man without the assistance of anyone makes his escape or attempts to escape, he is liable to be fined $1,000 and punished with imprisonment for seven years, whereas if anyone shall rescue him or set at liberty a man convicted of a capital offense or a felony, then that man shall be fined not to exceed $500 and imprisoned not more than one year. The beauties and consistencies of this bill are more apparent as we proceed section by section; they become more symmetrical whenever you strike a new section proposed by the Commission or approved by the committee. I would ask any member of that committee—lawyers, men engaged in the solemn duty of enacting the criminal law—or any member of the Commission to show me why it is wise or humane to say that a man who escapes without force or escapes before conviction is more guilty and ought to receive a greater punishment than a man who rescues a convicted felon, a man who has been convicted. I would like to hear him give an explanation of that. Yet when efforts are made to relieve this bill of new sections which impose these great penalties and outrages and punishments of crime against men who are innocent in many cases, it is voted down by gentlemen who either do not understand the proposition or who will not listen to it. I have no amendment to offer with reference to this section. Doubtless the penalty is enough when you say that a man who by force sets at liberty a person who has been convicted of a capital crime or who has been convicted of a serious felony shall suffer a fine of not to exceed $500 and imprisonment of not to exceed one year; but when you go back to the man who voluntarily escapes without force, who has not been convicted and may never be convicted, and announce as a punishment for that crime a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than seven years, I think it is going too far.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DENBY. I will ask a minute to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will answer any question the gentleman proposes.

Mr. DENBY. I do not desire to ask any question, but only wish to point out to the gentleman from Georgia in the case of section 144 imposing a penalty for the release by officers of person committed for a capital offense the punishment is imprisonment and fine——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that.

Mr. DENBY. In the case of the other party it is imprisonment or fine. In this case it must be both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It can never be longer than a year in section 144.

Mr. DENBY. It says he shall be fined not more than $500, but he must be imprisoned, and it makes a great deal heavier punishment in many cases than the other section provides for.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not think the gentleman's explanation of the symmetry of this bill will be accepted. It needs further explanation. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 145. [Whoever, by force, shall rescue or attempt to rescue, from the custody of any marshal or his officers, the dead body of an executed offender, while it is being conveyed to a place of dissection, as provided by section 328 hereof, or by force shall rescue or attempt to rescue such body from the place where it has been deposited for dissection in pursuance of that section, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "officers," in line 10, and insert the word "deputies."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 71, line 10, strike out the word "officers" and insert in lieu thereof the word "deputies."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering the amendment is that I know of no existing law that permits anybody to be an officer of a marshal; therefore, when it is so expressed as it is here, "marshal or his officers," it strikes me it is contrary to existing law; but under the existing law he is authorized to have deputies, and I believe deputies will more perfectly fit this particular clause than the word "officers." That is all.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 146. Whoever shall, under a threat of informing, or as a consideration for not informing against any violation of any law of the United States, demand or receive any money or other valuable thing, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "two" on page 71, line 21, and substituting the word "five;" and amend by striking out the word "one" on page 71, line 22, and substituting the word "five."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to detain the committee more than a few minutes. The amendment which I have offered, and which I hope the committee will adopt, aims at increasing the penalty for the crime of extortion. The crime of extortion as it originally appeared in the Revised Statutes applied only to extortion by internal-revenue informers. The Commission which revised the criminal laws has seen fit to enlarge the scope of this provision so, as it stands upon the bill they have offered to us, it provides for extortion by anybody under any United States laws. This is nothing more or less than blackmail, which, as we all will admit, is one of the basest, the most contemptible, and most objectionable of crimes. The penalties which the Revised Statutes provide for other similar crimes are much larger than the penalties here offered us. For instance, the penalty applied to perjury is $2,000 fine and imprisonment for five years, and the penalty provided for forgery is $5,000 fine and imprisonment for five years, and when we come now to the contemptible crime of extortion, or blackmail, we are offered a penalty of only $2,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than one year.

I would ask the committee to adopt this amendment, raising the penalty to $5,000 even and five years' imprisonment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] says in regard to the broadening of this law by the Commission and the committee is true. Section 5484 refers to the person who shall receive any money or other valuable thing under a threat of informing or as a consideration for not informing against any violation of the internal-revenue law. The committee felt that that provision ought to extend to any person attempting a threat in order to receive money or informing against any violation of the law of the United States. It was broadened in that respect. The committee, however, after careful consideration, did not see any reason why the penalty should be broadened, why it was not as great an offense to commit this violation against the internal-revenue law as it was against any other law. In its deliberation and in its wisdom it saw no reason at that time for increasing the penalty. I see no reason now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 40, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 147. [Whoever, having knowledge of the actual commission of the crime of murder or other felony cognizable by the courts of the United States, conceals and does not as soon as may be disclose and make known the same to some one of the judges or other persons in civil or military authority under the United States, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the word "willfully" after the word "States," line 1, page 72.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, line 1, after the words "United States," insert "willfully."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the language of the section just read is, indeed, very broad and far-reaching. Before an individual can be convicted of any crime there ought to be some evil intent accompanying the crime committed by the party. In fact, as I understand the law, you can not have a crime unless it be accompanied by an evil or a guilty intent. Now, the language of the statute is:

Whoever, having knowledge of the actual commission of the crime of murder or other felony cognizable by the courts of the United States, conceals the same or fails to make it known to the officer of a United States court, etc.

Mr. Chairman, I am able in my own mind to conceive of a state of facts where a person might be cognizant that a crime had been committed and at the same time have no intention to violate this section of the statute. It strikes me that the language set out in this section of the statute is broad enough to make a parent—a father or a mother—amenable to this section of the statute for failing to convey information to a United States court or some other authority that the crime of murder or some other crime had been committed. The presumption of law is that parents always give their children sound, logical, moral advice. Under this section of the statute I believe that it is broad enough to make a parent amenable to this statute if the parent would fail to notify the proper authorities that his own child had committed the crime of murder or some other crime against the laws of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] for a question?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I am in favor of the amendment that the gentleman offers. At the same time it seems to me that the suggestion he makes would not cure the objection made—that is, the fact that it might apply to a father or mother who might conceal the guilt of his or her child. Would the amendment that the gentleman offers change the law in that regard?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I believe it would, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that it would impose upon the Government seeking to convict anyone who had violated this section of the statute the additional burden of proving that it was a willful concealment on the part of the person, and that is one of the objects of the amendment. It is to impose the burden of proof that it was a willful concealing on the part of the person who is charged with concealing the offense. I believe the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a reading of this section will show that it is first necessary for the person who could be charged under it to have knowledge of the actual commission of the crime, and that it is the policy of the Government in existing law to place upon that man the burden of disclosing as soon as may be, or to make known to some one of the judges, the location of that person if he has escaped. And it would be obviously against the purpose of this law, therefore, to include the word "willfully" where the amendment seems to call for it to make it necessary that he should willfully conceal, where the policy of the law requires absolute disclosure on his part. Therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman and members of the committee to these words included in this section, "conceals and does not as soon as may be disclose and make known."

We have, Mr. Chairman, in all the courts of this country, State and Federal, a plain definition and a substantial understanding of what a "reasonable time" is; but I do not know of any construction of any court that gives a full definition of what "as soon as may be" means. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out, on page 72, commencing with the beginning of line 2, the words "as soon as may be" and substituting therefor the words "within a reasonable time."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, line 2, strike out the words "as soon as may be" and insert in lieu thereof "within a reasonable time."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, if I were to call upon the chairman of the committee now to define what would be the length of time that would be implied in the words "as soon as may be," he would find it quite difficult to define it, because it would depend upon a variety of acts of our life whether the man required would be prepared or not to fairly comply with the duty imposed under the construction given by some court of the meaning of "as soon as may be." But when you put it in the form of "a reasonable time" we know what that means. It seems to me that you are giving to a court a very great deal of discretion which it ought not to exercise under the use of the words "as soon as may be." Why, what does that mean? It means in its ordinary acceptance that the information required must be given without delay. Ordinary business matter will not excuse delay. What definition does the committee give it? What explanation have they to give that make the words "as soon as may be" superior in meaning to "within a reasonable time?"

Why, I could stand here and imagine incident after incident when a court might say it was within your power to come in and give this information at once, when probably the court would not understand what were all the incidents and circumstances and conditions that environed you at that time or the man that was to be punished for not complying with the mandate. What demand of justice requires that such an exacting limitation shall be injected into our criminal statutes? No statute ought to impose unreasonable requirements to ensnare and punish even a thoughtless but innocent citizen. Since the time courts were organized the words I offer to substitute—"within a reasonable time"—have been understood by the courts and by the people. I would be glad if the chairman of the Revision Committee will point to me in this extensive revision of the Statutes of the United States that he has so laboriously and studiously framed any other place that the words "as soon as may be" have been inserted in the statute. A man may do a thing "within a reasonable time" and have the judgment of a fair court in his favor to that effect, while another judge might, and could, say, "You became possessed of this criminal knowledge on a given day and the statute requires you to communicate that knowledge to some judge or other official of the United States court 'as soon as may be.' You certainly could have come to such official during the day you acquired the knowledge. You did not, and hence you are guilty."

Mr. HOUSTON. I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will materially alter the clause in a way that would not be wise. When you say that he shall disclose this knowledge "within a reasonable time" you may impose perhaps an impossible duty on the party. "As soon as may be" is a legal phrase, and carries with it not only a reasonable time, so far as time is concerned, but carries with it an opportunity to make the disclosure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my distinguished friend from Tennessee give me a definition of what he means by "as soon as may be?" How would you limit it?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is difficult to do that; but it has an accepted meaning and is used in the law books. It strikes me that "as soon as may be" implies that the party shall disclose it in a reasonable time if the opportunity is presented.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The term "as soon as may be" is not so applicable in criminal proceedings as "within a reasonble time." This seems plain to me. If "as soon as may be" means a reasonable time, then I distinctly prefer the reasonable time. In statutes which impose penalties and punishment we should always be careful to use terms and words most easily and best understood.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the words "as soon as may be" would be better, because they would not require an impossible performance. "As soon as may be" implies as soon as one reasonably can or is able to.

Mr. KIMBALL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether Bouvier, Anderson, or anybody else who has ever undertaken to give us an understanding of technical legal terms has ever defined or undertaken to say what the term "may be" means?

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I can not just now refer the gentleman to the definition of the phrase, and I doubt if he will find it; but I think it has a meaning that is clear and patent and would be plainly understood in this statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 37, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 162. [Whoever, within the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except by lawful authority, shall have control, custody, or possession of any plate, stone, or other thing, or any part thereof, from which has been printed or may be printed any counterfeit note, bond, obligation, or other security, in whole or in part, of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, or shall use such plate, stone, or other thing, or knowingly permit or suffer the same to be used in counterfeiting such foreign obligations, or any part thereof; or whoever shall make or engrave, or cause or procure to be made or engraved, or shall assist in making or engraving any plate, stone, or other thing, in the likeness or similitude of any plate, stone, or other thing designated for the printing of the genuine issues of the obligations of any foreign government, bank, or corporation; or whoever shall print, photograph, or in any other manner make, execute, or sell, or cause to be printed, photographed, made, executed, or sold, or shall aid in printing, photographing, making, executing, or selling, any engraving, photograph, print, or impression in the likeness of any genuine note, bond, obligation, or other security, or any part thereof, of any foreign government, bank, or corporation; or whoever shall bring into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, any counterfeit plate, stone, or other thing, or engraving, photograph, print, or other impressions of the notes, bonds, obligations, or other securities of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of bringing before the committee what appears to be a change in existing law of some importance, I move to strike out the words "or other thing," on page 82, line 13.

I should like to learn from the chairman of the committee the object of inserting a provision of such sweeping significance, whether occasion for it has arisen in the ordinary administration of government? I suggest that under this language a person having in his possession printer's ink of the same quality or character as had been used in the perpetration of such forgeries as are here described might be liable to prosecution. At least such is the impression it makes on a first reading. I should like to know from the chairman of the committee if he had fully weighed the significance of this language before the committee decided to employ it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the committee did give that very careful consideration. They were informed by the Department that new processes were constantly being employed by the counterfeiters in counterfeiting the securities of the United States; that in the ingenuity, skill, and scientific knowledge of the men engaged in defrauding the Government they sometimes outran the ingenuity of the lawmakers who were engaged in its protection. Therefore we included the words "or other things" to cover any other device that might be used for that purpose.

I think the gentleman will see that printer's ink could not be held to be included in the words "or other things," because these words refer to plates, stones, or other things from which have been printed or may be printed any counterfeit notes, etc. The gentleman is aware of the law of legal construction by which such words as "or other things" would be construed to mean things of the character of those that have been enumerated in the section—similar things. The committee gave the matter careful consideration and felt that this language was necessary for the full protection of the Government.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania having stated that the committee has given this matter careful consideration, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 202. Whoever shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage, horse driver, or carrier, or car, steamboat, or other conveyance or vessel carrying the same, shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. While we have penalties provided against sending through the mail a certain character of literature, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read from an afternoon paper of this city an article about a Member of this House, and I desire to ask whether or not there ought not to be some penalty for the dissemination of such literature through the United States mail.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the communication will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

"IRON MAN" GAINES DANCES ALL NIGHT—IS AT WORK EARLY.

In the make-up of JOHN WESLEY GAINES of Tennessee, long-distance talker of the House of Representatives, there is no such thing as laziness.

He sends the sluggard to the ant and denounces by his conduct the ways of the sloth. He proved all this to-day.

Last night Mr. GAINES was at the Southern Relief ball. Amid the strains of violins that sobbed of romance and hearts and love, he spoke glittering generalities and dazzling compliments to the fair womanhood of the South. His damask hair, unprofaned by a hint of brown or black, moved with the gentleness of a benediction among the dancers, and when he bowed, its soft masses touched like a new poem on snow the lily hand of some radiant belle. He arrived early and stayed late. Cupid had the Mars of legislative debate in subjection and led him from beauty to beauty for many hours. GAINES did not go to bed until this morning.

But he scorned a long and resting slumber. He was no wearied macaroni, no exhausted dandy who needs must sleep away the day.

At 7 o'clock he was eating his breakfast. At 9 o'clock he adorned a Government Department by going there on some errand that required the ornateness of his presence with a bureau chief. At 9.30 he was in his office on Capitol Hill, touching with tender skill some minor matters of State before the House should convene.

Therefore it is established that he is not a lazy man. He can dance all night and work all day. O, woman! where is thy victory? O, Cupid! where is thy sting?

[Great laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. SIMS. What was the ruling of the Chair as to the article being nonmailable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not requested to rule upon that, but the gentleman from Kentucky asked that the question should be submitted to the committee. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 212. Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use, and every article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing which is advertised or described in a manner calculated to lead another to use or apply it for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral purpose, and every written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information directly or indirectly, where, or how, or from whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore-mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, or where or by whom any act or operation of any kind for the procuring or producing of abortion will be done or performed, or how or by what means conception may be prevented or abortion produced, whether sealed or unsealed, and every letter, packet, or package, or other mail matter containing any filthy, vile, or indecent thing, device, or substance, and every paper, writing, advertisement, or representation that any article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing may, or can be, used or applied for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral purpose, and every description calculated to induce or incite a person to so use or apply any such article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing, is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post-office or by any letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, or shall knowingly take, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition thereof, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 212, line 18, strike out the word "or," before the word "lascivious," and after the word "lascivious" add the words "vile, filthy, or indecent."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to cure a defect that I think exists in the present law. Under the decision of the Supreme Court it has been held that these terms "obscene, lewd, or lascivious" refer only to sexual impurities or matters pertaining thereto. Now, there are a great many vile, filthy, and indecent articles not relating to that subject that are transmitted through the mails. We, the committee, have had these things before us, and we have had the information from the Department as to the character of many things not inhibited by existing law. Many of them are not covered by these words, but they ought to be prohibited and they will be by this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the words in lines 19 and 20, "or other publication of an indecent character." Would not that cover the same thing that the gentleman's amendment seeks to cover?

Mr. HOUSTON. We discussed that matter, and it was thought that these words would go far enough, but I did not think so, nor did the Department think so. They wanted the language to be broader. As I remember it, the amendment I have offered is in keeping with the report of the Commission.

Mr. PAYNE. The language of the gentleman's amendment, I think, is entirely in keeping with the language in line 20. I doubt if it enlarges it any, but it is in the same direction.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think it is necessary under the holding of our court. This provision should be specific, and these words will make the language of the section plain and specific.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not rise with the idea of making any objection, but only to suggest that it was covered by language already in the bill. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will say on behalf of the committee, Mr. Chairman, that we gave this section very careful consideration. We spent a long time endeavoring to cover this entire ground. We had communications from the Post-Office Department, and we had persons before us, and after a careful and exhaustive examination we felt that the language in this section did cover the ground effectually. On behalf of the committee I can not accede to this amendment. I think what the gentleman from New York says is true, that existing language covers that particular point.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. But there can be no objection to the amendment?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman means that there is no objection that matters of this kind ought to be excluded.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask if there is any objection to inserting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Except that it is sufficiently covered in the section as it now stands.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] thinks it may not be, and there can not be any objection to having it sufficiently covered.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would say to the gentleman that the committee spent a great deal of time upon the word, considering the advisability of adding the word "indecent" in this section. This word has such a broad signification and means such different things to different people—that is, so many persons consider some things indecent that others do not—that we deemed it wise to let the section stand as it is. The gentleman knows that a great deal of agitation has been going on throughout the country as to the signification of this word as applied to literature, and some books have been excluded from some libraries on the action of a committee because they deemed those books indecent, when, as a matter of fact, they were the current literature of the day. I recall particularly that the books of Mark Twain were excluded from a library in the East upon the ground that they were indecent, when, as a matter of fact, they are introduced freely and are welcomed in almost every household in the country. We, at the time that we were considering this section in committee, concluded that the introduction of the word here would open such a broad field for construction on the part of judges and of the post-office authorities in the application of criminal statute that it was unwise to use it in the connection suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks whether there could be any objection to excluding from the mails all kinds of obscene literature, of course there can be none, and this committee will offer no objection to any amendment that will make that more clear, but they do not think the method proposed by the amendment will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in further answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] I think there are very serious objections to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON]. Unfortunately in legislation the thing desired by a man is frequently very foreign from what is accomplished by the particular language used. Now, all of us are in hearty accord with the desire of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] to protect the mails and the people from indecent and impure literature, but some of us who have taken the trouble to look into the history of this section and the matters that have been litigated in the courts know that there is a very great danger by the use of such words as are suggested by the gentleman's amendment of giving to the Post-Office Department a censorship of the press. In furtherance of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] said, I remember that Mark Twain's book of Eve's Diary, as I recall the title—I think that is the title of the book—was excluded from the Boston Library because the trustees of that institution considered it an indecent book. Now, that is simply an illustration of what will be possible under this statute if amended as suggested. The word "indecent" put in front of the word book would be open to such construction as would practically enable the Department to exercise a censorship over the press, and while I think that perhaps we should take some steps looking to a better exclusion of improper literature from the mails, we ought to be exceedingly careful that we do not use language that simply enables the Department or some person in the Department to exclude books that may not appeal to him or her.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I desire to ask this question: Does the Department approve of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON]?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall that the Department offered these words as an enlargement of the statute. It is true that Mr. Comstock appeared before our committee. He has been actively engaged in prosecuting violations of existing law, and has done very valuable work, but Mr. Comstock, like a great many gentlemen engaged in a special line, is apt to become just a bit extreme, and his view, if it had been adopted by the committee, would have given to the Department powers that could and would have led to great abuses. The committee has tried to make this section properly fulfill its mission without so enlarging it as to give to that Department the power to exclude a great many publications that the majority of men do not consider immoral or indecent.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I would like to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that this matter has been up once, possibly twice, before the Judiciary Committee. I should not want to see the Department's power of censorship extended, but I did think, as I heard the words read from the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, that this touched a phase of the question that had not been presented to us in the Judiciary Committee, and that possibly it might be a good thing to have it inserted; but if the gentlemen have studied it already, why that is a very different matter.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What phase of this legislation has been pending before the Judiciary Committee in any other than the fraud-order law?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It came up in the discussion growing out of the Crumpacker bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; the fraud-order law.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It did not involve these specific propositions. My recollection agrees with that of the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. In further answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] I desire to say the committee did consider this section at great length, not only for one day, but for several days, and the final judgment of the committee was against the insertion of these words, though it was understood at that time that the gentleman from Tennessee would bring the matter to the attention of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PAYNE. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I should ask to have the Clerk read the first four lines as the paragraph would be amended by the gentleman from Tennessee?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as requested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every obscene, lewd, vile, filthy, or indecent book——

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say, if the gentleman will allow me, comparing the two, I think the language of the committee is better than that of the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not think he enlarges it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that the Clerk did not report the amendment correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every obscene, lewd, lascivious, vile, filthy, or indecent book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, etc.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is proper to say to the Committee of the Whole that the courts in construing the words "obscene, lewd, or lascivious," have narrowed those words within a very small compass. There is no doubt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will considerably enlarge the statute, and my opposition to it is because it will enlarge the statute, not that I am opposed in the slightest to preventing the going through the mails of books which are really immoral, but I am not willing to have language capable of the construction that those words are, particularly the word "indecent," to go into the statutes, and thereby give the Postmaster-General and those under him the power to exercise what I believe to be a censorship over the press.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky, is it not a fact your section already contains language that in order to be consecutive and intelligible should have those words put in the preceding part of your section? You say in line 22 here, "or for any indecent or immoral use." Now, that is the first time in your section that the word "indecent" occurs.

Mr. SHERLEY. But, if the gentleman will notice, the word "indecent" here is qualified by the word "use," so that it becomes very narrow. When you speak of an indecent book there are as many opinions as people discussing the matter, and there have been hundreds of books published within the last year or two that you could find a dozen opinions about as to whether they were or were not indecent books. That does not apply to "indecent use." There the word "indecent" is limited, but here, if placed in front of the word "book," it becomes very broad.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That same criticism to a certain extent is applicable to "obscene, lewd, and lascivious."

Mr. SHERLEY. The courts have construed those words so as to apply only to a certain line——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And we simply take chances under this legislation of getting the same kind of conservative construction on the part of the courts of the language suggested. Of course, it is broader; I agree that it is broader.

Mr. SHERLEY. Inasmuch as you are broadening the statute, if the courts shall undertake, in execution of the will of Congress itself, to construe what the words meant, it would be that it was intended to give greater power, a much greater power.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not think the language of the section would be open to that construction.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Does the gentleman think that this section embraces two propositions which ought to be separated? The first part of the section down to line 21, on page 110, provides that certain classes of publications shall be unmailable; that is to say, shall be excluded by the Department from the mails. Now, I think we all agree that that ought not to be enlarged. I think there is a pretty general feeling in this House that the power of the Post-Office Department to control literature and to control the business of citizens of the country ought to be curtailed rather than enlarged. Then comes the second part of this section, from line 21 on page 110, which provides for punishment for anyone who mails matter of that sort. I should be very glad if the proposition were brought in here, not enlarging the power of the Post-Office Department, but enlarging the power of the courts to punish upon indictment and prosecution. I should be very glad to vote for that sort of a proposition, and I do not think that in Committee of the Whole we ought to undertake to amend this sort of a proposition in the manner suggested.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is another amendment that will come up for consideration later on, looking to the elimination of certain words that require an element of proof hard to supply—that is, the words "for the purpose of circulating," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. The requirement that a man shall only be convicted upon proof that he has taken prohibited mail matter or caused it to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing of it will be eliminated if this subsequent amendment is adopted, and I, for my part, am in favor of the elimination of it. There has been a failure of justice due to the inability of the Department to show that the matter was taken from the mails for this purpose. But that is an entirely different matter, as suggested by the gentleman, from the enlargement of the language as to what books may be excluded from the mails.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I think that we are all in practical accord with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] in believing that persons who mail such matter shall be punished in the courts, but that we do not want to do anything now which would enlarge the discretion of the Post-Office Department in this connection.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will understand that it would be absolutely wrong to say that a man should be punished for mailing something that we permitted to go through the mail.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has he not a right to appeal to the courts?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I think a man may very well be punished when no authority, without a trial to exclude, should be lodged in a Department. It is not a question of what the man is permitted to do that I am dealing with. It is a question of what authority the officers of the Post-Office Department should have over the right of a citizen to use the mails. Let him be free to use the mails, perhaps more free than he is now, subject to responsibility if he abuses the privilege.

Mr. SHERLEY. I see the gentleman's point, and what he is fearful of is what I also fear, the power of the Department, but I suggest also that it is not proper that we should ever punish a man for mailing something that we permit to be mailed. In other words, the crime consists in sending through the mail something that ought not to go through. Now, if you are going to punish him for doing it, you ought not to permit the doing of it, because prevention is better than punishment. The trouble with the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] is that it applies to the word "book." The adjective "indecent" is subject to such construction that no man can know how far the law would go. For that reason I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I have no objection to declaring that matter of that sort shall not be mailable. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that a man should not be punished for doing that which we permit to be done; certainly we could not punish him for doing a thing which we make it lawful to do; but I deny that the officials of the Post-Office Department should have the right to exercise a censorship of these matters in the first instance. The question of whether a man is responsible is one thing, and the right of an executive officer to pass upon what he may do is another.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true; but unless the Department has power to exclude from the mail, how are you going to exclude them from the mail?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Just as a man is free to assault somebody.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] if the person aggrieved under this section has the right to appeal to the courts?

Mr. SHERLEY. So far as the section is concerned——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can you appeal from the decision of the Department?

Mr. SHERLEY. If you enlarge the language here, it gives the Department power to exclude books they consider as indecent from the mail.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have we not passed some law here recently that gives the right to appeal to the courts?

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand it, we passed through the House a bill that gave the power to the court to review the action of the Department, but that has not become a law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who represents the committee, whether or not, in his opinion, if the Postmaster-General wrongfully exercised his discretion and undertook to exclude matter that was mailable under the provisions of law, would or would there not be a remedy by undertaking to use the mail, by mandamus?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to think, as the law exists now, there would not, because the courts have held that such action exercised under the discretion vested in the Department was not reviewable by the court.

I certainly think there always ought to be a remedy for the citizen when the Department rules against his right to use the mails.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then your impression of the authorities is that as the matter stands the court would not maintain a petition of mandamus for wrongful exercise of discretion on the part of the Department.

Mr. SHERLEY. I recall to the gentleman the status of the law, as he will remember, as it relates to the exclusion of an individual from the use of the mails. You remember we had that matter up last Congress.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The fraud-order proposition?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, the fraud-order proposition. There the courts have held the action of the Department in determining what was not admissible was not reviewable by the courts, so that a man has no relief.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will state in all fairness, as I know he would, that the Post-Office Department has stated that their orders are reviewable by the courts, and that the courts have not held that they were not subject to review, as I understand it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. By way of mandamus or other process.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean to state the position of the Department, but my understanding of the law is that the court has no review in the full sense of the word. In other words, they can not review the facts and determine whether the Department has properly exercised the powers given to it.

Mr. MANN. Well, on the other hand, the Department says that there is no question about the power of anyone who thinks he is wronged by a ruling of the Department to go into court and upon presentation of the facts have an order issued overruling the order of the Department and requiring the admission to the mails of that which has been ruled out. That is the position of the Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact is, regardless of the view of the Department, efforts have been made to get the action of the Department reviewed, and the courts have refused action because the court had no power.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be familiar with such cases, but I am not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the fraud-order case; and this House passed a bill conferring that power specifically on the courts, but it failed to pass.

Mr. MANN. Stating it more accurately than the gentleman, the House passed a bill for the purpose of conferring that power upon the courts, but this House has no power to pass a bill that confers power upon the court without the other coordinate branch of Congress, and it did not confer the power, and it is not the law. And if this proposition comes before this House again I hope I may have the opportunity to present to the House reasons and examples which I think ought to condemn any such proposition.

If the gentleman will take occasion to investigate the fraud orders issued by the Post-Office Department, and the reasons for those fraud orders, he would know that the Post-Office Department through these orders have shut out from the use of the mails some scheming rascals, some of whom live in my town, some of whom live in the town of the gentleman from New York, and some in the State of the gentleman behind me, who are ready to go into another part of the country, always changing from one name to another, and from one scheme to another. You can not harrass them in the criminal court at all. That would not shut them out from entering into other schemes. The only way to reach these scoundrels is to deprive them of the use of the mails.

The Post-Office Department has become familiar with some of the men of that class who change overnight their names and their locations, and knows how to meet them. I believe that people throughout the country are entitled to protection from that kind of men. I believe that the honest people are entitled to protection from fraudulent schemes of these men who live by their wits and not by work. I would not restrict the power that exists there now in the slightest degree. I believe, and as I am informed I have the right to believe, that anyone has the privilege of going into court and present his case; and if he can obtain competent evidence he can get justice. The trouble as to the matter of there being no adjudication is, while these men who have been shut out by the Post-Office insist to Congress that they have no remedy in court, they can to-day go into court and ask a remedy upon the facts. They have no desire to have the facts presented to the court.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to ask the gentleman if he does not know that the Post-Office Department will exclude matter from the mails without giving the parties who send it even notice that it is to be excluded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the contrary, it is the universal practice of the Post-Office Department, unless they have already shut out a class of people whom they know professionally, whom they know change from one place to another—and in that case they do not always wait to give them notice—it is the universal practice of the Post-Office Department not only to give notice, but to give a hearing, before they shut a man out from the use of the mails; and I dare say that no honest man has ever been deprived of the use of the mail without a hearing.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has taken rather a broad range. In regard to the power to be vested in the Post-Office Department, that is not especially pertinent to this discussion. This is simply the enactment of a penal statute making certain things unlawful, describing certain offenses against the penal laws of the United States. This does not involve the question that the Post-Office Department might exercise an oppressive power, or a discussion of the extent to which that power might be oppressive. The authority and the power is already involved just as much as it can be by the addition of the words that I have offered by way of amendment. It is already unlawful to publish any obscene, lewd, or lascivious books. You talk about the Post-Office Department having authority and power to suppress publications of certain kinds and character. There are a great many publications that ought to be suppressed to the extent of being forbidden to be transmitted through the United States mails, such as all those matters that relate to sexual impurities and others that would be included by this amendment. Perhaps some of the books referred to by the gentleman ought not to be transmitted through the mails. I do not recall the ones that come within that category.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. In a moment; but I say that the power is here given to pass upon a book and to determine whether or not it is lawful to pass it through the mail. That power exists now as to those things forbidden and made penal by this statute—that is, those things relating to sexual impurities. But if it does not relate to sexual impurity, but to some vile, indecent, hideous, shocking kind of immorality or indecency of a different kind, then it is not forbidden, then it is not prohibited from passing through the mails; and I want to say that these words that I have offered by way of amendment do enlarge that statute so as to embrace these other vile things.

In response to the gentleman from New York, who asked if the words in line 20 did not already give this same power, I want to say that these words "or other publication of an indecent character," according to the holdings of the court in cases of that kind relate to similar matters, things of a similar character, and have been held to relate to matters concerning sexual impurities. Now, these other things ought to be prohibited just the same. I want to call attention to the language of the penal code of New York in forbidding the sale of certain articles along this line.

The articles that are forbidden to be sold are:

Any obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, indecent, or disgusting book.

That is broader than this Federal statute a good deal. It is none too broad. I think this law ought to be broadened. I think it is necessary to broaden it if you would prevent other vile and indecent things going through the mails except the particular class that the courts now hold to be excluded and that I have alluded to.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, my colleague on the committee, that there has been a recent decision by the court of appeals of New York which holds that the words of the section that he has just read apply only in a case where sexual impurity is suggested, and that those words are confined to about the same meaning that they are here confined to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Do you mean the words contained in my amendment?

Mr. PARSONS. The words you just read from the New York Code.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It makes those words substantially synonymous with "obscene and lascivious."

Mr. PARSONS. It make them substantially synonymous; yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If that were the correct construction, this would not enlarge the act at all.

Mr. PARSONS. I also wish to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that his words do not enlarge the act; that a Federal court has decided that the word "obscene" in this section includes what is indecent or filthy.

I will refer him to the United States against Smith, 45 Federal Reporter, page 477.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then the act is subject to all the adverse criticisms made by the committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree to that proposition at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Maine, I desire to say that if the words do not enlarge the statute they are useless; if they do, I think you are going beyond where we can safely go. All of us are agreed that we want to exclude from the mail an indecent book; but you can not get any agreement among us as to what is an indecent book. Some might think that Fielding's Tom Jones ought not to go through the mails, while the rest might think it was one of the classics in the English language and should go through. There is the danger of using the word "indecent" as applied to a book.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that all that criticism applies to the statute as it now stands and as fully as it could with the amendment when it would be the same subject added to the one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 21.

Mr. STAFFORD. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is that announcement of no quorum in a proper form?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that that is the form. The point that no quorum has voted can not be made under the rules of the House, but the proper way is to make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. BRODHEAD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I rise to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer an amendment now. The Chair is undertaking to ascertain if a quorum is present.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a motion for tellers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to understand how the record stands. Does the record show that the amendment was adopted and the committee has risen?

The CHAIRMAN. The House was dividing.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did not the Chair declare the result?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had declared the result when the point was made that no quorum was present, and that vacates the vote. The committee is now dividing, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has moved that the committee do now rise.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it be too late to ask for a division on the assembling of the committee when the committee next meets?

The CHAIRMAN. The division will be taken immediately, and on that tellers may be demanded. When the committee next meets it will take up the division.

The motion of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania was then agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11701, the codification of the criminal laws, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BRIDGE ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13102) to authorize the County of Elmore, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Coosa River, Alabama.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Elmore, Ala., be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Coosa River at or near Wetumpka, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEFLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 251. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved February 6, 1907.

H. R. 4891. An act to authorize the city of Burlington, Iowa, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

H. R. 10519. An act to authorize the Nashville and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Celina, Tenn.

COMMERCIAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

[For message, see Senate proceedings of this day.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the chairman of the Sheridan Statue Commission, proposing an appropriation for the statue of Gen. Philip H. Sheridan—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of East Orange, Passaic, Maywood, Madison, and Millington, all in the State of New Jersey, and of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., Baltimore, Md., Blacksburg, Va., and Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to refund the inheritance tax to the Stevens Institute of Technology, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURROWS presented resolutions of the legislature of the State of Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Lansing, Mich., January 18, 1908.

I, Clarence J. Mears, deputy secretary of state of the State of Michigan and custodian of the great seal of the State, hereby certify that the attached sheets of paper contain a correct copy of house resolution No. 61. In witness whereof, I have hereto affixed my signature and the great seal of the State, at Lansing, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1908.

[SEAL.]

CLARENCE J. MEARS,
Deputy Secretary of State.

House resolution 61.

Concurrent resolution requesting Congress not to make any further reductions in the tariff on sugar.

Whereas during the past nine years over $10,000,000 have been invested in the beet-sugar factories of Michigan, whose output this past year was nearly 150,000,000 pounds of sugar, valued at $6,500,000, of which over $3,000,000 were paid to the farmers of the State for the cultivation of 75,000 acres of Michigan farm land; and

Whereas this great industry was started under promises from the State of Michigan of a bounty of 1 per cent per pound for all granulated sugar manufactured from the beet, which bounty the factories of the State, with one exception, have never received; and

Whereas the beet-sugar manufacturers of Michigan have more than kept their promise to the State, that the farmers should be paid $4 per ton for 12 per cent beets, by actually increasing such price to $4.50 and $5 per ton; and

Whereas in the United States, during the past year, beets were harvested from 317,284 acres, and for the first time in our history the output of beet sugar in this country exceeded that of cane sugar; and

Whereas since this industry was started under promised protection in the platform of the Republican party, sugar has been admitted free from Hawaii and Porto Rico, and at a largely reduced rate of tariff from Cuba, to the great detriment of the beet-sugar interest, while only the loyalty of a few Republican Senators, led by Senator BURROWS, saved this industry from a deathblow by the free admission of Philippine sugars to our market; and

Whereas it has now been practically demonstrated that, if left alone, the beet-sugar industry of the country will produce sufficient sugar not only to supply the rapidly increasing demand in this country, but for export as well: Therefore,

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That we do earnestly protest against any further reduction of the tariff on sugar, as calculated to ruin one of the most important industries of this country;

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, requested to use their utmost endeavors to prevent any such reduction, and as far as possible to discourage any agitation of the question at the next session of Congress; and

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to transmit to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Michigan a certified copy of these resolutions before the convening of the next session of Congress.

Mr. BURROWS presented memorials of the Merchants' Association of St. Joseph; of the Business Men's Association of Battle Creek; of the Michigan Retail Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Association; of the Grocers and Butchers' Protective Association of Coldwater; of the Business Men's Association of South Haven; of the Board of Trade of Alma; of the Hillsdale County Branch of the National Association of Retail Druggists, of Jonesville, and of sundry citizens of Belding, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PROPOSED FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. SMOOT. I present an address of the Commercial Club of Salt Lake City, Utah, on the subject of the recent financial panic and suggesting legislation. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the paper was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

An address to the President, the Congress, and the people of the United States.

1. A law amending the present law governing greenbacks, to authorize the Government expenses for the succeeding four months, amounting to perhaps $75,000,000 per month, to be paid in a new issue of greenbacks. (So paid, the money would be at once distributed to every portion of the Republic. If the present greenbacks were a safe money when issued, to double their amount would be good, inasmuch as the population has doubled since then and property values have increased tenfold.)

2. A law authorizing national depositories and national banks to purchase of or loan money to individuals, firms, or corporation upon the bonds of the United States when presented and deposited for such sale or loan; the United States Treasury to supply such depositories and banks with special Treasury notes for that purpose. (The object being, of course, to help individuals, firms, or corporations in a stress like the present one; our understanding being that something over $340,000,000 of such bonds are now in private hands and unavailable for use in the country. Such a law ought to go far toward relieving the present strain.)

3. A law requiring the purchase and immediate use in subsidiary coin and silver certificates of 50,000,000 ounces of silver annually in quarterly purchases, to reenforce the much-needed small coins and silver certificates.

4. A petition to Congress asking that body to authorize and indorse the calling of an international conference by the President to consider and if possible to agree upon the remonetization of silver on a fair ratio with gold, the appointment of a commission favorable to remonetization, and authorizing such commissioners to negotiate for such remonetization when a majority of the leading powers consent.

The reasons for this are manifold. Of the many we name a few as follows:

1. Silver is basic money and so declared in the Constitution of the United States.

2. Every reason supplied for its demonetization was a fallacy as events have since demonstrated.

3. The decision by the people against silver in 1896 no more settled the question than it did the tariff question.

4. The immense sums invested in permanent property in the past seven years, the immeasurable sums needed for future investment (Mr. J. J. Hill says five thousand millions are needed by the railroads in the coming five years), are notices that the struggle of the United States should be like that of the great powers beyond the sea, to hoard all the gold possible.

5. The gold reserves of the world need to be strengthened in every possible, legitimate way to support the immense investment pyramid of credit.

6. The product of gold in the world now and for many years to come is, and must be, from two to two and a half times the product in value of that of silver, while quite two-thirds of the inhabitants of the earth know no basic money except silver.

7. Remonetization of silver would avoid the necessity of sending gold to the Orient or Spanish America.

8. The demand for silver, even as a commodity, is insatiable, and restored it would be as it always was before it was dethroned, a steadier measure of value than gold, because its use would be so much more general, and it was always the money hoarded by the poor.

9. Silver made resumption of specie payments possible, and had it not been disturbed, the present distress would have been avoided, for with it restored every bank would be greatly strengthened, and no combine of capital could precipitate a panic.

10. Silver restoration would settle all difficulties with exchanges in dealing with silver-using countries, it would make possible a stable currency for the Philippines; it would magnify our trade and prestige in the Orient and Spanish America.

11. Between 1873 and 1896 because of demonetization of silver miners of the West lost quite $350,000,000; the losses suffered on that account by the producers of the Eastern States is measured by the fall in values, which was not less than 37½ per cent.

The loss of silver miners since 1896 by the demonetization has been quite $300,000,000, the gain being chiefly to foreigners, and no Government ought to force a senseless loss of that magnitude upon any portion of its people, for, in the words of President Roosevelt:

"What is of vital consequence to one portion of our country is of vital importance to the whole country."

Our country struggled slowly upward for sixty years. The gold discovery of 1849 caused more advancement in ten years than there had been in the previous sixty. Ten years later came the Comstock, which held the credit of the nation secure through the great war.

Silver demonetization caused a depression which culminated in the absolute paralysis of business and the ruin of all who were in debt. The mining of the precious metals in the far West has been the vitalizing, steadying force of the Republic for fifty-seven years. Those miners have never made a request that was not founded in justice and which did not hold the good of all the States in its scope. Their appeals are entitled to the respectful consideration of the President, Congress, and country.

Respectfully submitted.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] on the 20th instant, to report it favorably, with amendments, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate, and that the expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments of the committee were, in line 5, after the word "committee," to insert "and to have said hearings printed for the use of the committee;" and in line 6, after the word "sessions," to strike out the words "or recess."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SURVEY OF COWLITZ RIVER.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, submitted by himself on the 21st instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to extend the examination and survey of Cowlitz River, provided for in the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, up to the head of navigation at Toledo, Wash.

JACOB JOHN LOCHER.

Mr. WARNER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10368) to authorize the Secretary of War to change the name of Julius Flemming to his proper name of Jacob John Locher, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It empowers the Secretary of War to change the name of Julius Flemming, regimental quartermaster-sergeant, retired, on the records of the War Department to his proper name, Jacob John Locher.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 729) for the relief of Jacob John Locher, to report it adversely and ask its indefinite postponement, a House bill having just been passed for the same purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

SUEPORT OF KNIGHTS KEY, FLORIDA.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3344) amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 3, before the word "section," to strike out "first" and insert "seventh," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the subport of Knights Key, in the customs collection district of Key West, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill extending to the subport of Knights Key, in the State of Florida, the privi leges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement."
